Mr. KAHN. There are a great many admiralty cases, there are maritime cases, there are bankruptcy cases, there are smuggling and counterfeiting cases, and, finally, there are cases growing out of the enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion laws, which Chicago and New York do not have at all.

Mr. MANN. I believe they have as many of those cases in Chicago as they have in San Francisco.

Mr. KAHN. I doubt that very much.
Mr. PARSONS. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] mean that in New York the time of the district judges is not taken up with the district court work?

Mr. MANN. Not all of it.

Mr. PARSONS. Nine-tenths of it is so taken up.

Mr. MANN. He tries a good deal of circuit business over in New York?

Mr. PARSONS. Nearly all of their time is taken up in that district by district-court work.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says the district judge in New York City takes nine-tenths of his time trying district busi-

Mr. PARSONS. I repeat it. Occasionally Judge Holt, who is one of our three district judges, sits on the circuit court of appeals, but one of our district judges' time is taken up entirely with admiralty cases, another with bankruptcy, and another with criminal work, and occasionally one of them sits in the circuit court of appeals.

Mr. MANN. Who tries cases in the circuit court?

Mr. PARSONS. They are not tried by them.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say in that connection, if I may be allowed, that Judge Ray, of the northern district, frequently goes to New York and holds court for several weeks, and I do not see why the same thing can not be done in California-why some other district judge can not go into this district and hold court

Mr. KAHN. There is this situation: If you bring a district judge from Nevada, for instance, to try cases in California, it is a considerable distance from that State down to San Francisco. The litigants, in order to have their bills of exceptions settled, have to make long trips over into another State; and then probably the judge up there may be busy and may not be able to come down to try circuit-court cases. The distances in the West are very great. Now, my colleague [Mr. McKinlay] was an assistant United States attorney before he came to Congress. He had cases to try constantly in Judge De Haven's court, and he can assure the gentleman from Illinois that that judge is constantly occupied in trying cases in the district court of the northern district of California.

Mr. MANN. Who tries the circuit court cases?

They are not being tried. Our calendar is two Mr. KAHN. years behind time.

Every calendar is two years behind time. Well, I do not know— Mr. MANN.

Mr. KAHN.

Mr. MANN. The calendar of the Supreme Court of the United States, and all court calendars, are two years behind time.

Mr. KAHN. I do not think

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JICARILLA RESERVATION.

Mr. HOGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23650) to quiet title to lands on Jicarilla Reservation, and to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause allotments to be made, and to dispose of the merchantable timber, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23650) to quiet title to lands on Jicarilla Reservation, and to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause allotments to be made, and to dispose of the merchantable timber, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cancel the allotments made to the members of the Jicarilla tribe of Indians in New Mexico, provided all the members of said tribe relinquish all their individual right, title, and interest in the allotted lands to the United States, or he may cancel any of said allotments upon the relinquishment thereof by the allottee or his heirs; and each Indian taking advantage of the foregoing provisions and each unallotted member of the tribe shall be allotted not exceeding 10 acres of agricultural land and not exceeding 640 acres of other land, the areas to be in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and he shall cause patents to issue therefor in accordance with the fifth section of the act of February 8, 1887, (24 Stat. L., 388); but the merchantable timber on any allotments authorized by this act is hereby excepted from allotment to be disposed of as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior may dispose of all merchantable timber on allotments herein authorized during the term these are held in trust, and on the surplus lands for twenty-five years; the proceeds therefor to be expended under his direction for purposes beneficial to the individual allottees hereunder and their heirs, or for families, as he may deem best, and no part of such proceeds shall be expended for community or common benefits other than irrigation, but shall be equitably apportioned as near as may be among the Indians entitled.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Sec. 3. That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby empowered and directed to make relinquishment for any minor, insane, incompetent, or unidentified Indian for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman if this is a unanimous report?

Mr. HOGG. It is a unanimous report, and is a bill prepared by the Department in order to carry out more fully the provisions of a similar bill passed at the last session.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Prepared at the Indian Bureau?

Mr. HOGG. Yes. Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Hogg, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF TIME TO ENTRYMEN.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 86.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution 86, granting an extension of time to certain homestead entrymen.

Resolved, etc., That all persons who made homestead entry in the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Idaho, Minnesota, Montana, and Wyoming, where the six months' period in which they were, or are, required by law to establish residence, expired or expires, after December 1, 1906, are hereby granted until May 15, 1907, within which to make actual settlement and establish residence upon the lands so entered by them.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

After the word "entry," in line 3, insert the following: "Including persons who have filed soldier's declaratory statements."

After the word "the," in line 5, strike out the words "six months."

After the word "them," in line 10, add the following:
"Provided, That this extension of time shall not shorten either the error and of commutation or of actual residence under the homestead law:
Provided further. That the provisions of joint resolution 81, approved January 18, 1907, shall apply to the State of Idaho."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that it is a unanimous report, and it is simply to correct the resolution that we passed the other day where the word "settler" was used instead of "entryman," and the Department officials are inclined to the opinion that that resolution does not do what it contemplates, and this is to correct it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. By the way, why was this in the shape of a joint resolution instead of a bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have no knowledge as to that. It originated in the Senate; it is a Senate resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.

Mr. STERLING. I rise for the purpose of making an inquiry about the resolution. From the reading of the joint resolution I understand that it referred to joint resolution 61. I think that the number of that resolution which was passed was $1 instead

The SPEAKER. It is 81 in this amendment.
Mr. STERLING. It should be 81, I am quite sure.
Mr. LACEY. This resolution 86, I understand, is before the House.

The SPEAKER. It is not before the House. Unanimous consent has not been given. The gentleman from Illinois suggests that the joint resolution which is referred to should be 81 instead of 61.

Mr. LACEY. There are several amendments that ought to be incorporated in the resolution when it gets before the House.

The SPEAKER. The first thing to determine is, Is there ob-ction? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Mr. LACEY. The committee desire to offer some amend-

Mr. GRONNA. I offer the following amendments.
The SPEAKER. Is that a committee amendment?
Mr. GRONNA. These are committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. Committee amendments will first be offered. Mr. GRONNA. These are committee amendments. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

Line 7, page 1, after the word "to," insert "make entry under such declaratory statement or."
Page 1, line 3, after the word "make," insert "such entry or."
In line 2, page 2, strike out the word "sixty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighty."
Strike out line 4 on page 2 and insert "States of Idaho and Washington."

Mr. LACEY. One other amendment. The words months," in line 6, should be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. That is already reported.

Mr GRONNA. These amendments have all been authorized by the committee.

Mr. LACEY. One of these amendments is an amendment to a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on either of the amendments? If not, the amendments of the committee just read and the amendments to the committee amendments, including the amendments offered by the gentleman from North Dakota, will be considered as agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Burke of South Dakota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

PENSION BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills in order under the rule to-day may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that bills reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions, in order under the rule to-day, may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection. mittee of the Whole.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. Capron] will please take the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

On motion of Mr. Loudenslager, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills were passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 24815).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 24815—the agricultural appropriation bill—with Mr. FOSTER of Vermont in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on Agriculture on this bill may be read at this time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. Wadsworth) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Wabsworth) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture having had under consideration the estimates of appropriations required for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, respectfully submit the accompanying bill (H. R. 24815) and report as follows:

The amount appropriated by this bill for what is known as the ordinary and regular routine work of the Department of Agriculture is $7,635,790 and the amount carried by the act for the current fiscal year (exclusive of $3,000,000 for meat inspection) is $6,560,440, an increase, for the same objects, of $1,075,350.

The following increases in existing statutory salaries have been allowed:

The following increases in existing statutory salaries have been allowed:

Chief of Forest Service (Forester), $3,500 to $4,500.
Chief of Bureau of Chemistry, $3,500 to $4,500.
The increase in the salary of the Forester is justified not only by long and faithful service of the present incumbent of that office, but by the greatly increased work put upon him by the transfer of the Government national forests to his care and administration.

The increase granted to the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry is also justified by reason of long and faithful service and by reason of greatly increased and responsible duties put upon him in the enforcement of the pure-food law.

Also the following:
Chief of Bureau of Entomology, increase from $3,250 to $3,500.
Cashier and chief clerk, Division of Accounts and Disbursements, increase from $1,800 to $2,000.

Assistant Chief, Bureau of Statistics, increase from $2,200 to $2,500.
Director of Office of Public Roads, increase from $2,500 to $2,750.
The duties of these officers are constantly increasing with the continuing growth of the Department, and the committee therefore feel justified in granting these small increases in salaries in recognition of good service.

All other additions and increases in the statutory rolls of the Department are accounted for by the natural growth of the routine and ordinary work of the Department, and particularly to the great additional amount of work imposed upon the Department on account of the enforcement of the pure-food act, and are chiefly transfers from lump sums to statutory rolls.

The following increases in the lump-sum appropriations have been allowed:

forcement of the pure-food act, and are chiefy transfers from lump sums to statutory rolls.

The following increases in the lump-sum appropriations have been allowed:

Weather Bureau.—$25,000. For establishment and equipment of from three to five additional stations.

Bureau of Animal Industry.—$85,000. For reconstruction and repair of buildings at the several quarantine stations.

Bureau of Plant Industry.—$81,100. To take over tobacco work formerly done by the Bureau of Solis, and for enlarging and increasing the demonstration work, especially in the Southern States.

Forest Service.—$370,180. To provide a "working capital" for the improvement and development of the resources of the national forests. The National Government having taken over the care of the national forests, it behooves it to develop them as a business proposition and make them a source of profit, as is done with the government forests of the countries of continental Europe.

It is estimated by the Forester that in ten years the revenue from the national forests will equal $6,000,000, while the expenses of management and administration ought not to exceed $4,900,000, while they will be exceeded.

Bureau of Chemistry.—$504,080. This increase is due sôlely to the fact that the enforcement of the pure-food act devolves upon this Bureau of the Department of Agriculture.

Bureau of Statistics.—$10,000. For the employment of additional special agents deemed necessary by the Secretary of Agriculture to insure greater efficiency in the work of the Bureau.

Office of Experiment Stations.—$51,300, divided as follows: $4,500 for new duties imposed by the act of March 16, 1906; $19,000 to extend to the Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico experiment stations the same financial support as is accorded by act of Congress to the experiment stations in the States and Territories generally; $27,800 for Irrigation and drainage investigations, to meet the constantly growing demands for that work.

The following emergency appropriations have been allowed:

Cotton boll

minated.

Eradicating cattle ticks, $150,000, to be used by the Bureau of Animal Industry. This work was also commenced under an appropriation of $82,500, carried in the current agricultural appropriation act, and the good results already shown justify strong hopes that by still more extended and systematic operations the cattle tick, now inflicting so much loss upon the live-stock industry of the southern country, can be confined to a smaller area, if not completely exterminated.

These emergency appropriations swell the amount carried by this bill to $8,125,790.

The current agricultural appropriations to $8,125,790.

The current agricultural appropriation act carries $6,930,440 for the same purposes, showing a net increase of $1,195,350, which, as already shown, is due principally to the additional amounts necessary for the enforcement of the pure-food law and a "working capital" for the Forest Service.

In addition to the $8,125,790 carried by this bill for the use of the Department of Agriculture there is carried in other appropriation acts $3,000,000 for the enforcement of the meat-inspection law, and (estimated) for printing and other objects $1,647,000, making, in round figures, the grand total cost of the Department of Agriculture $12,772,790. FREE SEEDS.

There has been omitted from the bill the paragraph making appropriation for what is commonly known as the "Congressional free seed distribution." In its place there has been substituted a paragraph providing for the "purchase, propagation, and testing of new, rare, and uncommon seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, foreign and domestic," the sum appropriated for this purpose being $238,000, the same amount carried by the bill last year for the general $238,000, the same amount carried by the bill last year for the general distribution.

The substitute paragraph was drawn in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture and is strongly indorsed by Secretary Wilson, who expresses the emphatic opinion that he can render the farming intertests of the country vastly more valuable service by carrying out the provisions of the present bill than would be possible under the old plan. This opinion seems to be fully concurred in by the National Grange, the State granges, and practically all the other farmers' organizations of the country, because with almost complete unanimity they have adopted resolutions protesting against the present plan as wasteful and useless. It can not be disputed that the original purpose of the law was to limit the distribution of seeds to the introduction of new and valuable varieties. Your committee believes the best interests of agriculture demand a return to this original purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to make any remarks under the head of general debate, but prefer to any remarks under the head of general debate, but prefer to explain the various items in the bill as they are reached. I yield the floor to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, just prior to the adjournment of the first session of this Congress I stated that during this short session I would place in the RECORD a list of the insurance companies that wrote policies in San Francisco prior to the conflagration of last April and a statement of the manner in which they performed their obligations toward the insured in that city, be cause I believed that every man in the United States, no matter what his vocation, no matter whether he happened to be a large insurer or a small insurer, was entitled to know whether the company that accepted his premiums was an honest or a dishonest company.

Since that time the question of insurance in that city has been fully investigated by competent authorities, and a complete report on the insurance conditions was made to the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce by Prof. A. W. Whitney, of the University of California. It shows that there were 118 companies writing policies in San Francisco prior to April 18, 1906. Of these, 88 companies were domestic. That is, they were organized and chartered in the United States. Seventeen were English and 6 German, 2 were Scotch, 2 Canadian, 1 Austrian, 1 Swedish, and 1 New Zealand. It is a noticeable fact that not a single German company paid its obligations in accordance with the conditions of its contracts. Indeed, three of those companies refused all liability and withdrew from the State. They had been doing business in California for many years, and had collected premiums aggregating many hundreds of thousands of dollars. One of them, the Rhine and Moselle, made an offer of 50 cents on the dollar on small claims, and this was generally accepted, but two of them, up to the present time, have not paid a single dollar; however, upon a suit which was instituted in the German courts recently, judgment was given for the San Francisco policy holders, and I understand that at the present time these two remaining German companies, the Trans-Atlantic and the North German of Hamburg, propose to make some kind of a settlement with the holders of their policies. Austrian company, the Phanix of Austria, denied all liability and withdrew from the State. Our State Department here in Washington took the matter up with the Austrian Government, and I am pleased to state that through the kindly offices of that Department the Austrian company has promised and agreed to make some settlement with the policy holders at San Francisco.

Most of the English companies paid their policies in full, or less 2 per cent for cash. The assured in San Francisco were perfectly willing under the terms of the contracts to accept a discount of 2 per cent. That was done for several reasons. All the companies of course under the terms of their policies had sixty days within which to pay losses after the losses had been adjusted. Many of the assured in San Francisco, realizing the possibility of another large conflagration either in San Francisco or elsewhere within the sixty days, felt that it was worth 2 per cent to get their money immediately rather than take any risk in that regard. So there is no complaint at all toward those companies that settled at 1 or 2 per cent discount. Everybody considers that that was legitimate.

I have here, Mr. Chairman, a list of all of the 118 companies, and a statement as to how each company performed its obliga-tions toward the insured. The Aachen and Munich, which was a German company, settled most of its claims at 75 per cent, but paid 80 to 90 per cent on many claims. The Ætna, which was an American company, settled its claims at 100 per cent on the dollar. The Agricultural began by discounting at 75 per cent, but later paid mostly in full less 2 per cent for cash. The Alliance of Philadelphia paid its claims in full less 2 per cent for cash. The Alliance of London had a policy which contained an earthquake clause, but it settled its claims at 50 or 75 per cent, according to location. It paid its small claims of $500 or less in full, and paid at least $500 on claims of $500 or over.

I want to say that in making the offers of 50 and 75 per cent I want to say that in making the offers of 50 and 75 per cent in settlement of claims, according to location, the companies drew an arbitrary line, and if the insured happened to own property on one side of that line the company said, "We will only give you 50 cents on the dollar;" but if he happened to have his property on the other side of that line the company said, "We will give you 75 cents on the dollar; and if you do not accept that you can go into the court and sue for your money."

The American of Boston settled its claim at 40 per cent.

The American of Newark began by discounting, but later paid in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

The American Central paid mostly in full, with from 2 to 5 per cent discount for cash.

The American of Philadelphia settled its claims at 50 per cent. The Assurance Company of America settled its claim in general at 75 per cent.

The Atlanta-Birmingham.—The representatives of this company left the State in May. Nothing has been paid up to the present time, although offers of 25 per cent cash and 15 per cent in notes have been received recently.

Atlas settled its claims in full, and less 1 and 2 per cent for cash.

Austin Fire settled its claims at from 65 to 85 per cent, largely at about 75.

Austrian Phanix denied liability and withdrew from the State, having paid no claims.

British America of Toronto paid some claims at 85 and 90 per cent, but largely at one-third cash, one-third in six months, onethird in twelve months

British American of New York same settlements as the British

Buffalo German settled its claims in general at from 75 to 90

Caledonian of Edinburah settled claims at from 75 per cent up to 98 per cent, but largely at about 90 per cent.

Calcdonian-American same settlements as Calcdonian of Edin-

California settled its claims at 100 per cent.

Calumet.—Certain stockholders subscribed special fund of $500,000 upon the agreement of a majority of the claimants to accept this settlement, releasing thereby the plant and already existing assets of the company from further claims. The surplus to policy holders at the time was $375,000.

Camden involved in San Francisco conflagration only as rein-

Citizens settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

Colonial Underwriters began by discounting at 75 per cent, later settled nearly all of its claims at upward of 90 per cent.

Commercial Union of London policy contains earthquake clause. Settled its claims at 50 and 75 per cent, according to location. Paid claims of $500 or less in full and at least $500 on claims of $500 or more.

Mr. LOVERING. If the gentleman from California will pardon me. I would like to ask him to explain what the earthquake

Mr. KAHN. Some of the policies contain a provision that if fire occurs directly or indirectly through lightning, insurrection, or earthquake, then the company should not be held liable. There were some four or five different kinds of earthquake policies in use in San Francisco, each being worded somewhat differently from the others. Upon an examination of policies that were written in countries where earthquakes were frequent, notably South America and Central America, it was found that the earthquake clause in the policies in use in those localities was entirely different from the earthquake clauses in the policies used in California. The German courts have held, in the cases of which I spoke in the early part of my statement, that this earthquake clause in the policies of the North German of Hamburg insurance company was entirely too indefinite to be invoked as a defense in an action brought by the insured to recover under the terms of the policy, and judgment was consequently entered against the insurance company.

I shall ask at the close of my remarks to insert in the Record the report of Professor Whitney, which goes into this feature of the question very fully and sets it forth clearly and succinctly. It gives at some length the exact language used in their respective policies by the different companies regarding their liability in consequence of conflagration arising as the result of an earthquake.

The Commercial Union of New York had the same policy and made the same settlements as the Commercial Union of London. The Concordia settled its claims at 75 to 90 per cent.

The Connecticut settled its claims in full and less 1 and 2 per cent for cash.

The Continental settled its claims at 100 per cent.

The Delaware settled its claims at from 60 to 80 per centlargely at 75 per cent.

The Dutchess settled its claims at 30 per cent.

The Eagle settled its claims mostly at 75 per cent.

The English-American Underwriters began by paying its small claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash; in June dropped to payments of largely about 90 per cent, coming back finally to 98

The Equitable involved in the San Francisco conflagration

only as a reinsurer.

The Federal settled its claims at from 85 per cent up, but largely above 90 per cent.

The Fire Association of Philadelphia settled its claims at from 75 to 95 per cent; its early claims largely at 75 per cent, its later claims largely at 90 per cent.

The Fireman's Fund has paid 20 per cent on claims, has offered to pay 30 per cent more in cash, and remaining 50 per cent in stock of company. Claimants have generally accepted this offer.

The Franklin settled claims at from 75 per cent up-largely at about 90 per cent.

The German of Freeport settled its claims mostly at 60 per cent; now in the hands of a receiver.

The German of Peoria settled its claims at 50 per cent.

The German Alliance policy contained an earthquake clause which was not taken advantage of. It settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

The German-American policy contained an earthquake clause, which was not taken advantage of. It settled its claims mostly in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

The German National settled its claims at 60 per cent. It is now in the hands of a receiver.

The Germania settled its claims at from 75 to 90 per cent, largely at about 85 per cent.

The Girard settled its claims at from 75 to 90 per cent, mostly at 75 and 80 per cent.

The Glens Falls settled its claims at from 90 per cent up, mostly in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

The Globe and Rutgers settled its claims mostly at 75 per cent; a few at 90 per cent.

The Hamburg-Bremen settled its claims at 75 per cent.

The Hanover settled its claims at 75 per cent up, largely at about 90 per cent.

The Hartford settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The reduction made by the Hartford of 2 per cent is a legitimate reduction provided for in the contract?

Mr. KAHN. Absolutely. If the insured did not want to submit to the 2 per cent reduction he could wait sixty days and get his cash in full. But the people who were insured were only too glad to accept the discount of 2 per cent for immediate cash. As I stated before, they did not want to assume the risk of a possible conflagration elsewhere, and looked upon the 2 per cent discount as perfectly legitimate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I grant the gentleman ten minutes more. Mr. KAHN. The Home settled its claims in full, less 1 and per cent for cash.

The Home Fire and Marine made the same settlements as Fireman's Fund.

The Indemnity policy contains an earthquake clause. It settled its claims at 50 and 75 per cent, according to location. Claims of $500 or less paid in full, and at least $500 on claims of $500 or over.

The Insurance Company of North America settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

The Kings County involved in San Francisco conflagration

only as a reinsurer.

The Law Union and Crown settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

The Liverpool and London and Globe settled its claims at 100 per cent.

The London and Lancashire began by paying its small claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash; in June dropped to payments of largely about 90 per cent, coming back finally to 98 and 100 The company states that its payments have averaged about 93 per cent of the amount of its claims.

The London Assurance Corporation settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

The Manchester settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash; all policies had been reinsured in the Atlas.

The Mercantile Fire and Marine settled its claims mostly in full, less 2 to 5 per cent for cash.

Michigan Fire and Marine settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

Milwaukce Mechanics settled its claims at 70 per cent, having taken advantage of the Wisconsin safety-fund law.

Nassau settled its claims at from 70 to 90 per cent, mostly at 75 per cent.

National of Hartford began by discounting at 75 per cent; later settled nearly all its claims at upward of 90 per cent. company states that its payments have averaged 94 per cent of the face of the policy.

National Union settled its claims at 75 per cent up, largely at about 90 per cent.

New Brunswick settled its claims largely at about 75 per cent. New Hampshire policy contained earthquake clause, which was not taken advantage of. Settled its claims in full, less 1 per cent for cash.

New York settled its claims at 40 per cent.

New York Underwriters, same settlements as the Hartford. New Zealand settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

About one-fifth of the entire number of its outstanding policies contained an earthquake clause; company settled such claims at from 75 to 90 per cent.

Niagara settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash. North British and Mercantile settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

North German of New York has paid nothing; company in the hands of a receiver.

North German of Hamburg company has denied liability and retired from the State, having paid no claims.

North River settled its claims mostly at 75 per cent; in a few cases at 90 per cent.

Northern of London settled its claims in full, less 1 per cent for cash.

Northwestern Fire and Marine settled its claims in general at from 75 to 85 per cent.

Northwestern National settled its claims largely in full, less

2 per cent for cash.

Norwich Union policy contains earthquake clause. Settled its claims at 50 and 75 per cent, according to location. Claims of $500 or less paid in full, and at least $500 on claims of $500

Orient, same settlements as London and Lancashire.

Pacific Underwriters, same settlements as Fireman's Fund. Palatine, same policies and settlements as Commercial Union. Pelican settled its claim in full, less 2 to 5 per cent for cash, Pennsylvania settled its claims in full, less from 2 to 5 per cent for cash.

Phenix of Brooklyn began by discounting claims at 75 per cent; later settled claims in general at from 85 per cent up to 100 per cent. Data furnished by the company indicate that about 75 per cent of the company's liability will have been settled at an average of 98 per cent of the amount of the claims.

Philadelphia Underwriters settled its claims at from 90 per cent up.

Phoenix of Hartford policy contained an earthquake clause, which led to settlement of early claims at 75 per cent. The bulk of its claims were, however, settled without reference to the earthquake clause, mostly in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

Phoenix of London settled its claims in full and less 2 per cent for cash.

Protector Underwriters, same policies and settlements as Phoenix of Hartford.

Providence-Washington settled its claims in general at from 90 per cent up, but largely in full, less 2 to 5 per cent for cash. Prussian National settled its claims at 75 per cent.

Queen settled its claims at 100 per cent.

Queen City began by settling claims at 75 per cent; later settled claims in full, giving notes in some cases; the company states that payments on earlier claims have been brought up to the same standard.

Rhine and Moselle policy contains earthquake clause. Denied liability and withdrew from the State. Claims of $500 or less have been paid at 50 per cent.

Rochester-German settled its claims largely at from 90 per cent up.

Royal settled its claims at 100 per cent.

Royal Exchange settled its claims at from 75 per cent up, but largely at 85 to 95 per cent.

Scotch Underwriters, same settlements as Caledonian.

Scottish Union and National settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

Security of New Haven settled its claims largely in full, less from 2 to 5 per cent for cash.

Security of Baltimore in the hands of a receiver.

Springfield settled its claims in full, and less 1 per cent for Spring Garden settled its claims in general at 70 per cent. State of Liverpool settled its claims mostly in full, less from 2 to 5 per cent for cash.

St. Paul Fire and Marine settled its claims mostly in full, less from 2 to 5 per cent for cash.

Sun settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for cash.

Svea settled its claims at from 75 per cent up.

Teutonia settled its claims in full, less 2 to 5 per cent for cash.

Traders in the hands of a receiver.

Trans-Atlantic denied liability and withdrew from the State; no claims paid.

Union of Philadelphia involved in the San Francisco conflagration only as a reinsurer.

Union Assurance settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent for United Firemen's settled its claims at from 75 per cent up, but in general at about 90 per cent.

Victoria settled its claims in full, less 2 per cent.

Westchester settled some claims at 75 and 80 per cent, but later paid largely in full, less from 2 to 5 per cent for cash. Western of Toronto, same settlements as British America.

Williamsburg City, most of its policies contain earthquake ause. Settled claims on these at 50 to 75 per cent, according to location. On such policies paid claims of $500 or less in full and at least $500 on claims of $500 or more. Settled claims on policies that did not contain earthquake clause largely at 95 per cent.

As I have stated, Mr. Chairman, I have read this list of companies, together with a statement as to how each one treated its policy holders, in order that all persons in the United States who carry insurance may know whether the companies which accept their premiums are trustworthy and reliable in cases of conflagration. For, after all, no one knows where or when there is going to be a conflagration; no one can tell where or when there is going to be a great disaster. The fire at San Francisco was perhaps the largest property loss in the history of the world.

The most conservative estimate of that loss is $350,000,000, upon which was carried $235,000,000 worth of insurance. As I say, while that fire occurred only nine months ago, and we hope that no other community in the United States will suffer such another calamity as did that city, still no one can tell where the next conflagration may occur. It is a remarkable fact that within the past nine months three great earthquakes have occurred in various parts of the world, every one of which was succeeded by a conflagration which wiped out the entire business community of the city that was thus visited by an earth-

Mr. LOVERING. May I ask the gentleman a question? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Lov-ERING ] ?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly. Mr. LOVERING. Can the gentleman tell us, if he has any knowledge, of the settlement that was made in the earthquake that occurred at Valparaiso, and also the recent one at Jamaica?

Mr. KAHN. I have no knowledge upon that subject. Mr. LOVERING. Is it not a fact that they withdrew, both the English and German companies, and paid nothing at Valparaiso?

Mr. KAHN. I have no positive knowledge upon the subject regarding Valparaiso. All that I have is what I obtained from the newspaper accounts, and these, I believe, bear out the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Lovering]. Of course the disaster at Kingston is so recent that probably no action has been taken as yet by any insurance com-

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the leave of the House to print as a part of my remarks the report of the special committee of the board of trustees of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco on Insurance Settlements Incident to the San Francisco Fire, which report was compiled by Prof. Albert W. Whitney, of the University of California, at Berkeley.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter above referred to is as follows:

Report of the special committee of the board of trustees of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco on insurance settlements incident to the San Francisco fire.

[Approved at a meeting of the board of trustees November 13, 1906.]

San Francisco, November 13, 1906.

To the honorable president and board of trustees of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco.

Sirs: Your committee appointed to investigate insurance settlements incident to the late conflagration respectfully submits the report of Prof. A. W. Whitney, who was engaged to prepare the report under the general supervision of the committee.

We have been peculiarly fortunate in having the assistance of such an able investigator, with technical experience in insurance matters, and we accordingly take this opportunity for expressing our appreciation of his untiring efforts and for thanking Mr. Benjamin Ide Wheeler, president of the University of California, through whose consideration it became possible for us to secure his services.

We have been fortunate, too, in having our trustee, Mr. George E. Butler, as a member of our committee. His long experience and prominence in insurance circles have been of the greatest value in the investigation.

inence in insurance circles have been of the greatest value in the investigation.

Thanks are also due to the savings banks, which have given exact information as to the thousands of adjustments made on losses in which the banks were concerned; to Mr. E. Myron Wolf, State commissioner of insurance; to the press of San Francisco; to the representatives of many of the insurance companies, who have for the most part received our inquiries with great courtesy, and in general to the many merchants and attorneys who have freely given desired information.

In the preparation of this report we have kept in view its purposes as outlined in the original plan, to wit:

1. The moral effect upon the insurance companies involved, once they knew that the chamber of commerce proposed to make a reliable report, giving due credit to those companies which are fairly meeting their obligations.

2. Supplying information, on application of our members, relating to adjustments being made by companies with which said members might hold policies.

3. Sending general information to commercial organizations throughout the country relating to the insurance conditions in our city.

4. In the light of such information, venturing some suggestions that will tend to the betterment of the fire insurance business both for the insurer and the insured.

The appreciative expressions already received prompt us to believe that the first two purposes have been accomplished in a degree far beyond our expectations. It is hoped that the latter two purposes will be accomplished in the publication of Professor Whitney's report, which is the result of most careful work on his part, assisted by frequent conference with your committee.

Yours, respectfully,

CHAS. H. BENTLEY, GEO. E. BUTLER, GEO. D. GRAY, . Committee.

To the special insurance committee of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to submit to you the following report on the fire insurance situation following the San Francisco conflagration.

Yours, respectfully,

ALBERT W. WHITNEY.

San Francisco, November 10, 1906.

THE EARTHQUAKE.

THE EARTHQUAKE.

The San Francisco earthquake occurred at about a quarter past 5 o'clock on the morning of April 18, 1906. The shock lasted about one minute. The seismographic record at the Lick Observatory on Mount Hamilton, 50 miles away, but in a region where the disturbance was considerable, showed the oscillations to have taken place in all directions, with a maximum amplitude of about an inch.

Although the city of San Francisco was, because of its size, the largest sufferer, the destructiveness of the earthquake was probably greatest at Santa Rosa, 50 miles north. San Jose and Stanford University were also severely shaken.

The damage done by the earthquake in San Francisco depended very largely upon the nature of the ground at the point in question. The city may be divided into four districts or sets of districts. There are, first, the rocky hills and other more level land closely underlain by rock. There are, second, the intervening valleys where a natural deposit has occurred. There is, third, a region where sand dunes cover the rock to a depth of many feet. There is, fourth, the filled ground along the shore line and along the courses of old creeks; there are about 250 acres of this in the burned district, extending in its greatest width from the ferry to Sansome street, a distance of about half a mile. A large part of the wholesale district lay in this fourth region.

The first region, characterized by rock formations near the surface, suffered least from the shaking. The damage was confined mostly to the shaking to pieces of chimneys above the roof, the falling of some plaster and loosely attached architectural ornaments, and the destruction, more or less complete, of some notably badly constructed buildings. In the sand-dune country and in the valleys the damage was somewhat greater.

The damage on the made land, however, was much the most severe.

In the sand-dune country and in the valleys the damage was somewhat greater.

The damage on the made land, however, was much the most severe. Here there was not only a more destructive form of oscillation, but the settling of the land in some cases caused serious structural damage. Just how severe the earthquake damage was in the business part of the city will never be exactly known because of the fire that immediately obliterated its effects. There was, however, a very general shaking to pleces of chimney tops all over the city—in fact, throughout the whole region; there was to a much less extent general damage to plastering; in probably about one house of two or three was the damage to plastering so severe as to require repair. There were numerous cases of colapse of notably badly constructed buildings, old frame buildings with defective underpinning, brick buildings made with weak lime mortar and unwet bricks, and unbonded stone-veneered buildings.

Some few spectacular examples of buildings for this character, such as the Valencia Street Hotel (a frame lodging house) and the city hall (of stone and brick upon a steel frame), together with a certain amount of fallen cornices and scattering examples of walls partly fallen or cracked, constituted the main visible earthquake damage.

The structural damage was probably on the whole not large. In steel-frame buildings it was almost nothing—as, for instance, in the Call Building; in well-built brick buildings it was almost nothing—as, for instance, in the walls of the Palace Hotel, which stand to-day as a mute example of what good brickwork can be; in well-built frame buildings the structural damage was nothing. The earthquake damage in San Francisco stands as a monument almost entirely to cheap, dishonest, and insincerely ostentatious construction.

Coming back, however, to actual conditions, it is undoubtedly true that the business of the city could have gone on with very little interruption if there had been no fire, as it did in fact in the unburned part of th damage in such unburned buildings was in general not severe.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL BOARD OF FIRE UNDERWRITERS.

Mr. S. A. Reed, consulting engineer, in his report to the National Board of Fire Underwriters on the San Francisco confiagration, has the following to say concerning the extent of the earthquake damage:

"The actual damage, though appalling to those who experienced the shock, was not, as a general rule, structurally serious as far as appearance went. Apart from buildings having ponderous architectural attachments, particularly the city hall, where the damage was great and spectacular, the apparent structural injury was mainly to tall chimneys, church towers, and unbraced brick gables, copings, and projections. Interior plaster, tiling, and adhesively applied decorations were quite generally wrecked. House chimneys above roofs fell extensively.

Actual collapses were mainly confined to filmsy frame structures. Observation of the unburned western addition, and also of photographs taken between the earthquake and the fire, make it clear that San Francisco was far from being destroyed by the earthquake, and that outside of small districts in the flats it was the exception that a building was rendered uninhabitable. The effect on fireproof buildings was especially important, as the steel-frame type had never before been seriously tested in an earthquake. It may be said, generally speaking, that these buildings had no apparent structural injury. The steel frames appeared plumb and true, and, contrary to the early account, neither the sides nor the floors had dropped out. Cracks appeared in many instances, especially X cracks in pilasters built around exterior columns. The early accounts, stating that side walls had dropped out, probably arose from the fact that there were several tall and conspicuous steel frames in course of construction which had not yet received their side walls. Furthermore, at the City Hall a lofty architectural mass of cast iron and stone was grouped around a steel-frame dome, and t to a considerable extent, due to straining. In wooden frame buildings it was noted that where each story was framed to that below, unless diagonally braced, the damage was greater than where the verticals were continuous, as in the balloon frame of less repute. In fact, immunity from effects of the earthquake seemed to be a characteristic of buildings having vertical continuity as distinguished from vertical discontinuity. In steel frames, where each column is spliced to that below, column tiers are practically continuous. Buildings depending mainly upon gravity for their stability experienced the maximum injury. The ordinary brick wall has slight continuity apart from gravity aided by the bracing effects of the beams, unless the brick is properly laid in cement and properly bonded and the walls of more than usual thickness. Such walls as the latter were rare in San Francisco. Still, even in the case of weak walls, the interior bracing reduced structural damage where there was no actual ground displacement. There were, however, a large number of structural injuries, not apparent to the eye, but such as would have required expensive repairs had there been no fire."

The earthquake was followed by fires that broke out almost immediately at a number of points; in fact, there are said to have been as many as thirty of these, most of them in the region south of Market street. The city was supplied with water by three large pipes, each of which was broken where it crossed marshy ground outside of the city. During the second and third days of the fire some water was made available in the western part of the city by repairs. This water was instrumental in checking the fire at Van Ness avenue.

The efficient head of the fire department, Chief Sullivan, to whose efforts had been largely due the freedom of San Francisco in the past from disastrous fires, was fatally injured by the falling of a chimney. It is a sad coincidence that in the Baltimore, the Toronto, and the San Francisco confiagrations the fire chief was unable through personal injury to direct the work of the department.

There was an almost entire absence of strong wind during the fire, so that ignition and combustion went on slowly, and there was no occasion for the frantic efforts to escape that characterized the Chicago fire. The day of the earthquake itself was an ideal summer day. The contrast was most painful between the inferno in the city and the smiling serenity of nature across the bay. For three days a pillar of smoke stood over the city.

Some of the original fires were extinguished; the others coalesced during the first day. Many new fires originated, however, most of them by sparks or dynamiting, but some in the general confusion quite independently of the fires already started. Two of these independent fires spread and consumed many blocks of property in the heart of the city. One was the Hayes Valley, or "ham and eggs," fire at Hayes and Gough streets on the morning of the 18th, said to have been started by a woman in getting breakfast. The other was the Aleazar Theater fire, said to have been started by the overturning of a lamp by soldiers.

The water supply falling, dynamite was resorted to for blowing up buildings in the hope of thus stopping the progress of the fire. In some cases this was successful, but the dynamite being largely handled by those who were unfamiliar with its use, on the whole little good was accomplished and in many cases the fire was actually spread by its use. The fire was brought under control on the third day by a desperate stand at Van Ness avenue, a north and south street, 125 feet wide and about 1½ miles from the ferry. The intelligent use of dynamite, a line of hose to the bay, some water from the mains, a favorable wind, and a desperate hand-to-hand fight together made this successful, although at some points the fire crossed the avenue and burned a few blocks beyond. The total area burned was about 3,000 acres, or about 4.7 square miles, containing 520 blocks, and about 25,000 buildings; about one-half of these were residences.

THE INSURANCE SITUATION.

The amount of insurance covering property in the burned district was approximately $235,000,000 (estimated). All of this had been written by companies authorized to do business in the State, except about $6,000,000 which had been placed outside of the State in some 100 companies. The value of buildings and contents destroyed in the fire must have been about $350,000,000, basing an estimate upon the insurance liability, the known general ratio of insurance to value (about 70 per cent), and a guess that there was about 5 per cent of property that carried no insurance.

There follows a list of the authorized companies, with their capital and surplus, and their San Francisco premiums in 1905; membership in the Board of Fire Underwriters of the Pacific is also indicated. It was hoped that it would be possible to give the liabilities of the separate companies, but the data obtainable are not complete, and for that reason are not published.

 Statement as of December 31, 1905.
 Statement as of November 30, 1905.

Representatives of these companies, except the Helvetia-Swiss, which was not involved, without respect to the question of whether board or nonboard, met on April 21 in Oakland and formed an organization for facilitating adjustments and for securing uniformity of procedure. There were associated with these companies in the adjusting bureau also the following underwritiring agencies: Colonial Underwriters, English-American Underwriters, European Underwriters, Individual Underwriters, New York Underwriters, Scotch Underwriters, Philadelphia Underwriters, Protector Underwriters, Scotch Underwriters, Philadelphia Underwriters, also the Camden, a reinsuring company, the Manchester, whose risks had been insured in the Atlas, and the Kings County, a company which had withdrawn from the State, but still had outstanding insurance. Meetings of this organization were held daily up to May 16 and almost as frequently thereafter for at least another month. A general committee of fifteen on adjustments was appointed, whose principal work was the assigning to subcommittees of three of losses on which six or more companies were involved. Losses on which there were less than six companies were privately adjusted by the companies involved and did not come before the bureau.

The situation that the companies had before them on the 21st of April was the most difficult in the whole history of fire insurance. In this first place the conflagration itself was the largest that there had ever been; secondly, it was not an ordinary conflagration, but had been preceded by an earthquake for whose direct effects the companies were not liable and yet the evidence of which had been largely obliterated by the fire; third, as to some extent in all conflagrations or large fires, but of records of all kinds among the insured; fourth, San Francisco being the crocords of all kinds among the insured; fourth, San Francisco being the crocords of all kinds among the insured coast business was managed, there was a large destruction of the records of the c COMPANIES HELD IN NEW YORK, MAY 31, 1906.

"Whereas on the 18th of April, 1906, a great earthquake occurred in the city of San Francisco, Cal., which destroyed property to the value of millions of dollars, and was followed by a conflagration made unprecedented in extent and damage by conditions induced by and following said earthquake;

"Whereas the problems arising in connection with the settlement of such losses are complex and intricate to an extent never before equaled in the history of underwriting by reason of the following and other factors, namely;

"(a) The difficulty of clearly segregating losses for which companies are liable from those from which they are exempt;

"(b) The existence of many varying forms of policy contract;

"(c) The loss of essential records, both by insurance companies and by the assured;

"Whereas it is highly desirable that all losses for which insurance companies are legally liable should be promptly settled with equity and fairness to all concerned; and

"Whereas it is expedient that a statement as to the legal and moral liability of companies in regard to claims arising from the catastrophe at San Francisco should be made, the subjoined is adopted as a fair statement of such liability, suitable to be used as the basis for adjusting losses:

"Fourth, Where policies covered contents of buildings which are certainly not affected by the exemption conditions of the policy, claims under such policies should be paid, as soon as adjusted, subject to such deduction, if any, as may fairly be made on account of the salvage resulting from the removal of portable property from building before fire had reached them.

"Resolved, That all the insurance companies interested in this disaster, both domestic and foreign, be, and they hereby are, cordially invited to unite in the carrying out of this plan of operations."

It had been evident from the first that there was an entire lack of unanimity regarding the place of compromise settlements. This had shad been considered. A minority of the companies had stood for complete adjustments—that is, showing not only sound value, but the handy adjusted claim, the same to be binding upon the companies. A minority of the companies had stood for complete adjustments—that is, showing not only sound value, but the handy adjusted claim, leaving, there will be a state of the companies individually to arrive with the lausted at the amount of the adjusted claim, leaving, there are the state of the companies individually to arrive with the lausted at the amount of the adjusted claim, leaving, there are the state of the companies of the companies of the state of the companies o their losses in the old recognized way, adjusting each loss upon its individual merits.

The second class, on the other hand, was less homogeneous. It included, first, some companies so "hard hit" as to be unable, at the time at least, to contemplate payment in full; second, some companies that were quite willing to take any opportunity to escape as easily as possible, and, third, some companies which, sincerely enough, thought the plan a fair one and favorable for the insured, and were at least willing to put themselves on record in favor of it on a test vote.

As a matter of fact, when it came to actual settlement, some of the "six-bit" companies settled their claims quite as favorably as the "dollar for dollar" companies.

The difficulty of establishing claims where policies or the companies' records were destroyed, and particularly in the case where both were lost, was one of the elements of the early situation. Many of the companies did everything in their power to help the insured in this matter; others apparently tried to make as much trouble as possible. It was the same with the filing of proofs of loss. Some of the companies aided the insured by furnishing blank forms and by actual assistance in filling in the information; other companies, on the other hand, did every thing to prevent the filing of proofs of loss. Proofs of loss were refused, were thrown into the faces of claimants without being opened, and were even refused when sent by registered mail.

Reports of such gross incivilities very naturally found their way into the newspapers, as did likewise reports of many of the early settlements, which, as a matter of fact, were much lower on the average than they were later, some of the companies which began paying off early offering only 40 and 50 per cent, while others definitely denied liability altoyed, as it was very soon, by the "six-bit" split, led to a wave of popular indignation. The newspapers were largely responsible for this, but the blame for its inception unquestionably lies with those companies which began by using thoroughly disgraceful methods in dealing with their claimants.

Such a state of feeling between the insurers and the insured was most unfortunate. On the one hand, the timid—poor people for the most part, whose insurance was all they had—were frightened in thousands of cases into settling their claims at a much lower figure than was right; on the other hand, whatever natural instincts the insured may have had for telling the truth about their losses and for treating the representatives of the insurance companies as well-meaning gen surence situation in which there has been such disgraceful intimidation and discourtesy. Discourtesy was even recognized as worth a definite amount in salvage.

It can not be said too emphatically, however, that this does not apply to all the companies nor even to most of them. Apparently the trouble was principally due to adjusters from the outside, who came prejudiced and impressed with the necessity of making drastic compromises. And this was quite natural after all. The early newspaper accounts of the calamity represented San Francisco as destroyed by an earthquake, the fire having simply burned the ruins. Nearly every person who came here from the East during the first few weeks came with this impression. It was weeks before a true understanding of the situation thoroughly affected the insurance companies, and some have not been affected yet.

The companies which are most to be praised are those which, using as nearly as possible the methods of ordinary times, made careful but fair adjustments. Such companies have no serious complaint to make of the insured, and difficult as the situation was their experience proves that the attempt to adjust each loss on its merits was the only satisfactory method.

that the attempt to adjust each loss on its merits was the only satisfactory method.

On their own initiative many of the companies published their willingness to have claimants clear their property and to extend the time for filing proofs of loss, as well as to waive notice of loss. Following a suggestion of Governor Pardee, however, Mr. E. Myron Wolf, insurance commissioner of California, addressed a letter to each of the companies requesting a definite waiving of notice of loss and an extension of the time for filing proofs of loss to August 17.

Eighty-eight companies granted this extension of time. The companies which did not grant the extension of time gave as their reason the fear that this action would invalidate their reinsurance. As a matter of fact no such difficulty ever materialized.

One of the laws passed at the special session of the legislature early in June was as follows:

An act to amend the political code by adding a new section thereto, to be numbered section 597a, relating to statements to be furnished to the insurance commissioner by insurance companies.

[Approved June 3, 1906.]

the insurance commissioner by insurance companies.

"The people of the State of California, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows: Section 1. A new section, to be known as section 597a, is hereby added to the political code, to read as follows: "597a. The commissioner has power to, and whenever he deems necessary may, in writing, require any company engaged in Insurance business in the State of California to furnish the commissioner, as of a date, past or present, to be designated by the commissioner, a full and complete list of all its policies of insurance on property or risks located within that portion of the State of California included within the territory described by the commissioner, and which policies had not by the terms thereof expired on the date designated by the commissioner. Such list must show the number of the policy, the name in which the policy was issued, the amount for which it was issued, then anount for which it was issued, then are not the nature of the risk assumed by the company, the location of the property and the residence of the insured, and the form or class of such policy as designated on the policy by the company. The commissioner shall require such list to be accompanied by the several forms of policies so designated and classified by the company, and the forms of policies is fany, attached to each particular form of policy. Any company which fails or neglects to furnish such lists and forms for the period of ten days from the date of the commissioner's request shall forfeit its right to do business in this State, and the commissioner shall thereupon revoke, in the manner provided in section 600 of this code, the certificate previously granted such company to do business in this State, and said company shall also be liable to a penalty in the sum of $2,000, for the payment of which penalty suits may be instituted by the commissioner in the name of the people of the State of California, in a court of competent jurisdiction, to recover upon the bond filed by said company, pursuant to section 623 of the political code.

"Sec. 2. This act shall take effect immediately."

Accordingly, Commissioner Wolf, on June 7, sent a letter to the companies which had not agreed to the extension of the time for filing proofs of loss calling for a list of policies and policy holders. Some of these companies thereupon decided to extend the time for filing proofs of loss, while some sixteen filed lists of policy holders. The companies which neither granted an extension of time nor filed a list of policy holders were the following: American of Boston, American of Philadelphia, Delaware, Dutchess, New York, North German of New York, Spring Garden, Security of Baltimore, Traders, Westchester.

Punitive action with regard to these companies is still in abeyance. The first committee loss to be adjusted was reported back to the bureau to call a meeting of the companies concerned on each loss, at which the report would be read and explained and agreed to. This, however, turned out to be entirely impracticable, as the meetings were not attended. Thereupon reports were sent directly to the companies with the understanding that after one week payment might be demanded. The bureau practically finished its work in September. On November 1, 1.140 claims had been adjusted, on which the sound value was $128,059,023.38, the insurance $88,018,123.61, and the visible salvage $10,683,728.62, showing, therefore, a 68.7 per cent ratio of insurance to value and an 8.35 per cent salvage. There had been 1,237 claims altogether; 175 of these had been canceled. On November 1, 22 claims were still unsettled.

The coinsurance clause was very little used in San Francisco. If the district of the salvage, it is interesting to notice that while ordinarily the insured is too likely to look at coinsurance as entirely to the advantage of the insurer, here is a case where manifestly it would have been avery greatly to the advantage of the insured.

On account of the great number of losses and on account of the lack of evidence in a great number of cases as to the nature and extent of the damage done adjustments on the whole could not be made with as great care as usual. The companies generally insisted, following the New York agreement, upon a 10 per cent reduction in the case of lack of books to prove the loss on stocks of merchandise, and, in general, this was thought to be reasonable, it being evident that a failure to prove a loss satisfactorily opened a proper field for compromise. The matter of earthquake damage, was handled by t

SETTLEMENTS MADE BY THE COMPANIES.

The account of settlements made by the various companies which is given hereafter has a double purpose. There has been general interest throughout the country in the way in which the insurance companies were meeting the situation. To meet this demand it seemed only fair that some impartial account should be given, based on carefully collected information. Secondly, it will be a pity if the San Francisco conflagration passes out of remembrance without serving to point the way to some needed clianges in fire insurance: First, in the actual conduct of the business by the companies themselves; second, in legislation, and, third, in the attitude of the insured. The practically most important thing to know for this purpose is just what, in this crisis, the companies have done.

The amount given herewith is based on the tabulation of some 10,000 settlements. Information concerning these has been furnished by the

The amount given herewith is based on the tabulation of some 10,000 settlements. Information concerning these has been furnished by the insured, partly upon blank forms distributed by the chamber of commerce and partly on coupons printed in the newspapers. Reports on a large number of settlements have been received from the savings banks. This information was supplemented in some cases by personal statements from the companies themselves, a circular letter having been sent to all the companies inviting them to make statements if they so desired

ments from the companies inviting them to make statements if they so desired.

It was natural to suppose that claimants who would respond to solicitation of this kind would be mainly those who had complaints to make and that the information would thus not fairly represent the facts. This did not appear to be the case. A large number of responses were from persons who not merely had no complaints to make, but took occasion to express their appreciation of the courtesy and fair dealing they had experienced; a woman, for instance, having to take her baby with her to an insurance office, was told that the business would be concluded at her home; others told of the pains that the companies had taken to help them prove their claims.

Nor were all the good things said of the companies that were paying their obligations in full. Some companies while paying most of their large claims at a discount, paid some of their small claims in full to poor people who were suffering for the money. Another company that has not made settlements in full paid a widow with several children a policy that had clearly been forfeited.

In the following account of settlements no attempt has been made in general to go back of the actual bare facts. Behind the figures there are a thousand circumstances which have a bearing upon the case, but even if they were all known it would not be best to publish them. The companies have made their settlements, and there the case must rest.

To tell of the brave facing of the situation by some companies, the payment uncomplainingly of large assessments by the stockholders, the suffering caused among the poorer holders of stock, the weakness of spirit, in the case of other companies, of those who could best afford to pay, would be nearly as difficult as to tell the story of the individual settlements among the insured.

Neither has any attempt been made to go back of adjustments. Furthermore, some companies which are credited with having paid their claims in full, less a cash discount, were unquestionably n

" In the first edition of this report the Germania was, through an error, included in this list, express this fact with the requisite briefness without seeming to do an injustice to their otherwise excellent records.

Payments at first, in general, were on far less favorable terms than later. This was not altogether unreasonable, since it was impossible to give the early claims as careful consideration as the later ones. The reason, however, is unfortunately much more easily explained by the fact that the first payments were largely to poor people who were in no position to insist upon anything better, while the same companies later, particularly on committee losses, found themselves unable to refuse more liberal payments.

A few of the companies paid their claims with no discount for cash; most of the companies, however, took a cash discount of 1 or usually 2 per cent, and sometimes more if called upon to pay before the end of sixty days. Two per cent was generally recognized to be under the circumstances entirely reasonable, and companies paying at this rate were held in practically as high esteem as those that paid in full at once. As a matter of fact, to pay a claim two months before it was due was worth all of 2 per cent—first, because of the difficulty of realizing quickly on securities, but, secondly, quite as much because it often happened that during the sixty days additional evidence was obtained upon the claim.

quickly on securities, but, secondly, quite as an ender or was obtained upon the claim.

In the following list percentages usually refer to claims adjusted; in case of large discounts, however, the percentages refer to the faces of the policies.

Payments were not due till sixty days after adjustment; payments "in full" or "in full with a cash discount" mean immediate payments, it being understood that in these cases the claim would have been paid in full on maturity.

In some cases figures have been given that have been submitted by the companies. These, however, because of the fact that they have not been made up by the companies in any uniform way do not seem very valuable for companies.

No aftempt has been made to include in this list other companies than those represented in the adjusting bureau, and as a matter of fact several of the underwriting agencies, for lack of information, are not reported upon. Nor are reinsurance settlements explicitly considered. Many of the companies which did not pay their direct claims in full paid their reinsurance claims in full, and very properly; the average of all their settlements is thus larger than the average of their direct settlements. The list follows:

THE SAN FRANCISCO COMPANIES.

There are two classes of companies which may be given special attention—one, the San Francisco companies; the other, the so-called "earth-quake companies." The San Francisco companies suffered triply. In the first place, in their own home city they naturally had a particularly large amount at risk; secondly, their San Francisco securities were adversely affected; third, their stockholders were largely sufferers by the fire, and thereby lost to that extent the ability to come to their rescue. There were but three of these companies—the Fireman's Fund, the Home Fire and Marine, owned by the Fireman's Fund, and the California.

The California was a new company less than a year old. Its leaves rescue. There were but three of these companies—the Fireman's Fund, the Home Fire and Marine, owned by the Fireman's Fund, and the California.

The California was a new company, less than a year old. Its losses were several times its capital and surplus. In starting the company the stockholders had paid at the rate of $65 per share; after the fire they assessed themselves $240 per share, therefore nearly four times the value of their stock, paid their losses out of this fund in full, leaving the original capital and surplus intact.

The Fireman's Fund found itself in a very serious position. It not only had a' large liability of its own, but also a large liability through its agency, the Pacific Underwriters, and through its ownership of the Home Fire and Marine. It seemed at first as though the company would be able to meet its obligations, and, while thinking itself to be able so to do, a new company, the Firemen's Fund Corporation, was organized, in which the business of the old company was reinsured. This was done to save its plant in case of a possible stampede and to set free a part of its reinsurance reserve for the payment of losses. The situation became steadily darker, however, until it became apparent that the company's assets were not more than 50 or 60 per cent of its liabilities. The plant of the Home Fire and Marine was thereupon abandoned, the Fireman's Fund, as owner, becoming responsible for its liabilities. The Home Fire and Marine being known to be insolvent, no attempt was made to reinsure its outstanding risks.

A material element of the situation was the remarkable degree to which the Fireman's Fund possessed the confidence and, as a matter of fact, the loyality of the people of San Francisco, and it found in this critical situation a great forbearance and a sincere belief in the desire of the company to do what was right. The plan that was evolved is a novel one. The plan, and it has been accepted by nearly all the claimants, provides for the payment of 50 per cent in cash and 50 per cen

EARTHQUAKE CLAUSES.

The so-called "earthquake clauses" found in the policies used in San Francisco are as follows:

(1) "This company shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion, insurrection, riot, civil war or commotion, or military or usurped power, or by order of any civil authority; or for loss or damage occasioned by or through any volcano, earthquake, or hurricane, or other eruption, convulsion, or disturbance; or by theft; or by neglect of the insured to use all reasonable means to save and preserve the property at and after a fire, or when the property is endangered by fire in neighboring premises; or (unless fire ensues, and, in that event, for the damage by fire only) by explosion of any kind, or lightning; but liability for direct damage by lightning may be assumed by specific agreement hereon."

plosion of any kind, or lightning; but liability for direct damage by lightning may be assumed by specific agreement hereon."

One group of companies whose policies contained an earthquake clause, the German Alliance, German American, New Hampshire, and Phenix of Hartford waived the clause altogether.

The policies of the North German of Hamburg and the North German of New York both contain clause No. 5. In spite of the fact that the clause apparently distinctly limits the liability of the company so as to include damage by fire resulting from earthquake, the North German of Hamburg has based a denial of liability upon this clause.

The Williamsburg City at first denied liability altogether. The Alliance, Commercial Union of London, Commercial Union of New York, Indemnity, Norwich Union, and Palatine neither affirmed nor denied liability. They, with the Williamsburg City, were advised by counsel that they were not liable to their policy holders and that their stockholders could hold them legally responsible for any payments except in the case of compromise; they were advised that a basis for compromise could be found in the uncertainty attendant upon all litigation in the expense that would accompany suits and in the disturbance of their business relations, both in this State and abroad.

Engineers have been employed to make a survey of the city; on the basis of this an arbitrary line was drawn, so as to include all buildings supposed to have been destroyed by fires caused directly by the earthquake. In this region the companies compromised claims at 50 per cent. The destruction of buildings in the remaining district, although acknowledged not to have been due entirely to fires caused directly by the earthquake by the breaking of the water mains. In this region the companies compromised claims at 75 per cent.

ORGANIZATIONS OF POLICY HOLDERS.

Many organizations were formed, mostly private, for the purpose of facilitating the collection of insurance. These were concerned mostly with bringing suits in this country and abroad against the companies which denied liability. Representatives of these organizations are now in Germany. The companies which denied liability are the Austrian Phoenix, the North German of Hamburg, the Rhine and Moselle, and the Trans-Atlantic.

One organization in particular deserves notice. This, the Policy Holders' League, was formed late in June at a mass meeting called by the commercial bodies of San Francisco. The organization was of a public character, membership being open to anyone. The league had the backing of the best, most conservative business men in San Francisco. Its purpose was a broad and generous one, to promote in all ways possible the best interests of the insured of San Francisco. In particular it was planned to make collections at actual cost. The league was organized too late, however, to be of any great service in this respect, and this feature was abandoned. The league has continued though to act publicly in an advisory capacity—for instance, with regard to the Fireman's Fund and Calumet settlements.

WHAT THE EARTHQUAKE AND FIRE HAVE TAUGHT.

WHAT THE EARTHQUAKE AND FIRE HAVE TAUGHT.

There are many lessons to be learned from the earthquake and conflagration. In the first place it has been demonstrated that thoroughly well-constructed buildings on a good foundation are not materially damaged by such earthquake shocks as that of April 18. There is a great mass of evidence upon the effects of fire and earthquake upon various building materials and types of construction; there is no evidence at all upon the use of water in fighting conflagrations; there is a large amount of evidence upon the use of dynamite in stopping fire; there is nothing to be learned with regard to the niceties of adjusting; there is much evidence of the evils of the reinsurance system, as used in San Francisco; there is much to be learned with regard to the organization and handling of a situation of this kind on the side of both the insurers and insured.

We owe to the confiagration the fact that the status of the reinsurance reserve in the case of insolvent companies has been brought into question and that we are likely to have judicial decisions thereupon; that we are more definitely to ascertain the position that foreign insurance companies may occupy in our country, and that thereto we are to test the standing of the insured in foreign courts; that we are to test the standing of the insured in foreign courts; that we are to have judicial decisions as to liability under the earthquake clause.

The lesson that the insured will take most to heart is that insurance

The lesson that the insured will take most to heart is that insurance will not take care of itself, nor will his broker take care of it for him without some watching. The confiagration has shown, as has the recent life-insurance investigation, the need of popular education in insurance.

THE CONFLAGRATION HAZARD.

him without some watching. The insurance interests of a business house are immensely important and should be looked after by a trained person. The configuration has shown, as has the recent life-insurance investigation, the need of popular education in Insurance.

It did not need the growth and the configuration of insurance men the importance of the first of the configuration hazard; it was a vital question already, in fact, it had been only a few months before that an elaborate report on the configuration hazard; it was a vital question already, in fact, it had been only a few months before that an elaborate report on the configuration hazard; it was a vital question already, in fact, it had been only a few months before that an elaborate report on the configuration hazard of San Francisco had been issued by the National Board of Fire Underwriters, being one of a series on the large cities of the configuration and definite larger than what were needed barely to pay ordinary losses. It seems an opportune time to discuss the subject of the configuration hazard—what the companies may reasonably do, and what the insured may do to safeguard his rights.

The rate in fire insurance is designed to cover, first, the fire hazard; for the configuration hazard of the fire hazard is of two kinds, first, the hazard of ordinary fires, in which one or a few buildings are burned; second, the configuration hazard were eliminated, not only would a large part of the premium be cut out, but the multitude of risks the fluctuations would be relatively small and would be due mainly to general conditions that affect all business in much the same way. It would then be unnecessary for companies to hold large surpluses. Such, for instance, would be the condition of a computation of the configuration hazard is of the farsh the insurance is usually a private enterprise, there is no more fundamental fact than that the companies stand simply as agents of the insurance is for the previous provides of the promium bound of the promium bound of surplus shall be determined by the amount of the aggregate risks that are exposed to a single conflagration.

To summarize, then, surplus should be treated as a liability, and its amount determined by a reference to the aggregate risks exposed to a single conflagration. A company's business, then, in a single city must be limited not necessarily to exactly the amount of its surplus, for practically there is not enough insurance to be had to make this possible, but it should have some definite ratio to its surplus. But how is a new company to get a surplus? In either of two ways: Start small and grow big, or else put up the surplus in the beginning. And here is the function of the stock company rather than the mutual company. The insurance principle proper breaks down when it comes to dealing with the conflagration hazard and requires a boost from something else, namely, private capital that is willing to assume risk for the sake of gain. Pure insurance, only where there is a proper average, may be entirely mutual as life insurance and fire insurance in the case of well-scattered risks.

A new company, then, which desires to write business exposed to a conflagration hazard must put up a surplus. As the business develops and the surplus grows, the company may take on a growing amount of city business. If the company should desire to write less city business at any time or to retire altogether, part or all of the surplus would be freed from its character as a liability and would be at the disposal of the company.

The result arrived at is no strange thing. It is nothing but what conflagration hazard must put up a surplus. As the business develops and the surplus grows, the company should desire to write less city business. If the company should desire to write less city business, the company.

The result arrived at is no strange thing. It is nothing but what has occurred to every thoughtful person who has known the insurance situation following a conflagration. It is simply an insistence upon some commensurateness between the resources of a company and the amount at risk in a region subject to a single conflagration; an attempt, therefore, to prevent companies with a capital and surplus and tempt, therefore, to prevent companies with a capital and surplus, therefore, to prevent companies with a capital and surplus, therefore, to prevent companies with a capital and surplus, therefore, to prevent companies with a capital and surplus, therefore, to prevent companies with a capital and surplus, the state of the company of ten times that size, namely, in this case the companies that are now able to pay only 30 to 60 per ent. Notice in the table the great range in value of the ratio of premium income to available assets.

You may say leave such companies to perish of their own egregious intemperateness. That would do very well if it were the company of the surplus and if insurers were intelligent enough and well informed enough this would be better than legislation.

Before you go into a theater it would be well if you were able yourself to examine into the safety of the building. Since that is out of the question, the next best thing is a building law.

It is almost equally difficult personally to know the fitness of an insurance company to assume a risk. In view of the impracticability of doing this, the next best thing is a law regarding liability for the uncarrined current premium; there ought in the provided in a prescribed manner that this measure of the potential liability have been provided in a prescribed manner that this measure of the potential liability in the provided provided would be far more attractive to capital and would appear to a class of investors.

This, by the way, might apparently seem to be dictated by a thought of what would be best for the companies. Not so at all. The fundamentally mutual character of insurance is so dominant that the company is almost lost sight of. As a matter of fact, what is best for the insured and what is best for the company are in any large matters identical.

One point more; it may be said that a law of the kind proposed would work a hardship upon the small company. No great hardship; a small company may do as much country business as it pleases, and it may take a share of city business proportionate to its size. To attempt to minimize the advantage of size in fire insurance is ridiculous. Nowhere else is it more true that "to him that hath shall be given;" it reads: "To him that hath a large surplus shall be given;" it reads: "To him that hath a large surplus shall be given much city business and from him that hath not shall be taken away (by reinsuring it, if a company can be found to take it) most of that which an overenergetic agent has written."

And now let us come back to the immediately practical business as it is to-day. Massachusetts, which has always been the leader in intelligent insurance legislation, had a law a few years ago limiting the amount of risks that a company might assume in any one of certain districts in Boston. The law was repealed. It was presumably found that with the law in operation it was impossible to obtain enough insurance, the reason, of course, being that, while the legally prescribed limit would have yielded as much insurance as before, as a matter of fact the conservative companies would not write up to the limit allowed. There was therefore a deficiency of, to be sure, a very poor type of insurance, namely, one that gave practically no protection against conflagrations, but nevertheless it gave fairly good protection in the case of ordinary losses, and for this purpose, in the lack of anything better, could not be spared.

This, then, apparently disposes of the practical possibility of placing a limit upon city risk. Yes, absolutely, in large cities if the supply of insurance is to be always limited to what is available now. But the one hope of bettering insurance protection against conflagrations is the enlistment of more insurance capital, and the one way of doing this is to make the business more attractive. A limited liability law would do this. As a matter of fact the safety-fund laws of various States, New York among the number, are exactly of this nature, but if the liability is to be limited, the simplest, most natural limit seems to be had by a reference to the aggregate amount exposed to a single conflagration, as outlined above.

Still, as a matter of fact, whether liability should be limited to the is to be limited, the simplest, most natural limit seems to be had by a reference to the aggregate amount exposed to a single conflagration, as outlined above.

Still, as a matter of fact, whether liability should be limited to the surplus, the surplus and capital, or to the surplus, capital, and the excess of the unearned premium reserve over the actual cost of reinsuring the outstanding risks is a matter of detail, the important thing is to grant some form of limited liability in case of conflagration that will save the plant; but it should be granted only if there is the proper commensurateness between the conflagration risk and the company's assets. Is it worth while to think of conflagrations, or do they come so seldom that we may go on in sweet oblivion? Is the insurance business to be organized with the possibility of a conflagration clearly recognized, or is it to be based on ordinary loss, and heaven help us if we have a conflagration? A conflagration may be a theory in New York, but it is a fact in San Francisco. The conflagration hazard, basing it upon the three large conflagration, and spreading it over the twenty largest cities of the United States, can be demonstrated to have been (on the assumption that the rates have been adequate), on mercantile stocks half as large as the ordinary hazard, and on so-called "freproof" buildings several times as great as the ordinary hazard. This does not appear to be a hazard that should be neglected.

INSURANCE LEGISLATION.

INSURANCE LEGISLATION.

Nothing is more certain than that there ought to be more money invested in the fire-insurance business than there is to-day, or than there has ever been, if there is to be adequate insurance protection for large cities. To this end, as has been said, it is desirable that the business of fire insurance should be made as attractive to capital as may be consistent with the good of the insured.

A long step in this direction may be taken by applying intelligence and fair-mindedness to the subject of insurance legislation; in fact, intelligent legislation would have the effect of improving conditions for both the insurer and the insured, for inevitably any restriction upon the insurer is immediately shifted to the shoulders of the insured. But in our present condition in California the thing we least need now is more legislation. Publicity is better than legislation, and for some years fire insurance will continue to be a matter of public interest. There is no more inexorable economic fact than that unwise legislation will do one of two things, either raise the rates or drive companies out of business. The best thing that could possibly be done for the insured is to remove all unnecessary restrictions from the companies and to encourage the formation of organizations for properly adjusting rates and preserving stable conditions.

Such organizations seem to have the character of trusts, but in reality their nature is entirely different. Of course any organization may be used in such a way as to prevent competition, and doubless boards may be and have been used for this purpose; but there is nothing in the fundamental nature of a board as rate-maker that tends to restrict competition; quite the opposite; for this information regarding rates must of necessity become largely public property, and is to that extent generally available for whoever will to use. There will always be nonboard companies and rates will always be kept down by competition.

A STANDARD FORM OF POLICY.

A STANDARD FORM OF POLICY.

There is one matter that will almost surely be brought up at the coming meeting of the legislature of this State, and that is the adoption of a standard fire-insurance policy. The more simple and uniform the contracts in an insured community the better all around. There are some very strong reasons for adopting the New York standard form of policy:

First, It is the best existing form. It was made carefully by a committee from the insurance companies and the State superintendent of insurance.

mittee from the insurance companies and the State superintendent of insurance.

Second. The creation of a new form would be a work that should require far more time and thought than could possibly be given to it now.

Third. The New York standard form has been adopted by a number of States and, in the twenty years it has been in use, has received a large number of legal interpretations. This is unquestionably the point of greatest importance, since a policy has no surely ascertained meaning till it has received the interpretation of the courts.

The policy, to be sure, does not impress one with its simplicity nor its fairness to the insured; it is not an ideal policy; but its faults are lessened by the interpretations of the courts. At any rate this is no time to experiment. San Francisco needs now more than ever all the insurance that it can get and it is not expedient, to say the least, to run the chance of driving companies away that are already not oversure that they wish to stay.

If a standard form of policy is adopted, there should be some prescribed method of adding qualifying clauses, as, for instance, in red ink. There are some companies that will not do business on this coast without an earthquake clause. They should be allowed to offer their goods for sale, provided the goods are properly marked.

A DEPOSIT LAW.

A DEPOSIT LAW.

The State platform of one of the political parties contains a recommendation in favor of a State deposit law. This must surely have been adopted under a misapprehension, perhaps because of the feeling that if a deposit is to be made the more closely at home it is made the better. In reality a law requiring a company to make a deposit of any adequateness in the State, if adopted by all States, would drive foreign insurance companies from the country. If "foreign" means American companies that are non-Californian, then such a law even if passed by California alone would kill the California companies, because of the retaliatory laws of other States, which would require the California fornia companies to make the same deposit in every State in which there was such a law. Policy holders would be sufficiently protected if the law provided for funds anywhere in the United States for the benefit of United States policy holders.

THE STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY LAW.

One of the most remarkable features of this present insurance situation, as has been said before, has been the remarkably small number of appeals that have been made to the courts. The companies that have iound difficulty in making compromise settlements have not been the companies which were "hard hit" or "down and out," but the companies which were able to pay. In spite of the fact that California has a stockholders' individual liability law there is actually a likely to be no test made of it. This is certainly as critical a situation as is likely to occur, and if the law in this case is shown not to correspond to a popular want, it should by all means be repealed, at least so far as it applies to insurance companies, for its presence acts only to keep careful companies out of the State.

UNDERWRITING AGENCIES.

It is hard, at least for a layman, to understand how the existence of underwriters' agencies can be for the best good of legitimate underwriting. They possess no assets and are not recognized by the insurance commissioner. In a time such as the present their effect is to interject an irresponsible element between the insured and the real insurer. The only reason for the existence of such underwriting fictions is apparently that a company and a fiction can do more business than a company alone, but the question is, Can not any company through its ordinary channels do as much business as it legitimately should?

FIRE WASTE.

The most discouraging feature of the fire-insurance situation in the United States is the indifference of the American people to the enormous annual fire loss, due principally to flimsy and meretricious construction. Is it generally known that the average rate in the United States is over twelve times as large as the average rate in Great Britain and twenty-eight times as large as the average rate in Spain?

It is to be feared that cheap construction is such an ingrained national fault that it is almost hopeless to combat it. But San Francisco, with its monumental lesson from earthquake and fire, should think of these things seriously. The insurance companies are exerting an influence for good construction in their rates, and they should have the support and interest of every good citizen. There is one sure way of preventing conflagrations, and that is by giving fire nothing to burn.

SELF-INSURANCE.

SELF-INSURANCE.

One of the questions that has been raised by this situation is with regard to self-insurance. Under what conditions is self-insurance desirable and good protection? In the first place, there must be enough risks to yield a good average; second, these risks must be scattered in such a way as not to be subject to a single conflagration. Self-insurance in San Francisco, even if the risks were large in number, would not be sefe. ance in ... not be safe.

ance in San Francisco, even if the risks were large in number, would not be safe.

There are evidently some who suppose that carrying no insurance is in itself self-insurance. Not in the least; it is simply not being insured, not even by oneself. Insurance is a plan for averting the severe incidence of a loss by dividing its effects among all those who are exposed to a like hazard. In self-insurance the contributions are the whole of the risks; but their contributions must not be held in abeyance and then called upon when a loss comes, but they must be placed in a fund. The difference is just this: If the contributions are not actually segregated they are likely to be so tied up in the properties involved that when called upon suddenly the setting of them free is as disastrous as the unshared loss itself.

The contributions of the various properties should instead be collected into a fund and invested in easily convertible securities. In some conceivable cases the investment might be made in the very class of property insured. In such cases no insurance and self-insurance would be the same thing, as, for instance, in the case where a man owns a large number of rented dwelling houses; the loss of one of these does not come as a shock to the whole property.

On the other hand, suppose a property consisting of detached buildings of a manufacturing plant. When the paint shop burns it is a distinct loss and must be individually replaced; and yet the black-smith's shop can not be sold to pay for it, nor the office building; they are all needed, and indemnity can not be furnished from any of these sources. If a wise course has been pursued the premiums that would have been paid to an insurance company have been invested not in the business.

No properties should enter upon self-insurance until an insurance ness.

No properties should enter upon self-insurance until an insurance fund has been collected. The entrance, therefore, should be gradual. Year by year, as the fund grows, insurance in companies may be discarded. What the size of this fund should be depends upon the nature of the properties and the number of separate risks.

FIRE-INSURANCE PROFITS.

FIRE-INSURANCE PROFITS.

In connection with this configaration it is interesting to draw attention to the profit account in fire insurance. The underwriting profit has averaged lately—that is, for the last ten or twenty years before the San Francisco fire—about 3 per cent of the gross premium receipts. It is probable, however, that the loss in this fire will sweep out all such profit for the last fifty years. For if, offhand, we take the premium receipts in the United States during that time to have been $6,000,000,000, which is probably more rather than less than the true amount, the profit must have been somewhere near $180,000,000. The amount that will finally be paid in San Francisco is probably at least as much as this, thus leaving no underwriting profit during this time.

This does not mean, however, that the business has been conducted at a loss, for the principal source of profit is the interest on securities. As the assets of a company, which consist of the unearned premium fund, the surplus and the capital should be several times the capital, interest on these at, say, 4 per cent would give an excellent return upon the capital. When, however, one considers that the surplus is often largely made up of contributions by the stockholders and that not unfrequently they have been called upon to subscribe new funds to carry on the business, the return does not seem too large for the risk that is assumed.

CONCLUSION.

A few things remain to be said in conclusion. In the first place, unquestionably, taken all in all, the companies have done remarkably well. An immense sum of money has been paid into this city, a far larger sum than companies have ever been called upon to pay at one time before. In spite of the earthquake, in spite of the nearness in time of the Baltimore and Toronto conflagrations, the companies will finally have paid undoubtedly in the neighborhood of 80 per cent of the amount of insurance involved. At Chicago there was 50 per cent paid, at Baltimore 90 per cent. The remarkable difference between the showing made by the companies at San Francisco and at Chicago, where there were 46 that failed, shows the great progress that has been made in thirty-five years in legitimate underwriting. And yet the San Francisco experience clearly points the way to needed improvements.

The people of San Francisco owe a particular debt of gratitude to the companies which made the fight for the old methods—for adjustment of claims on their merits and for payment of just claims in full.

It must be evident that such a report as this is entirely inadequate to express the situation in any vivid way. It has been a trying time that most people will be glad to forget. So much money in controversy has caused an overstrain on human nature on both sides.

Unfortunately also most of the figures as to loss and liability are only estimates.

only estimates.

A very great deal of time has been spent upon the collection and tabulation of the data upon which the account of settlements has been made. These figures are believed to be correct. If any injustice has been done it has certainly not been from a lack of careful consideration. May there never be another such fire!

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, the amount carried by the present agricultural bill now pending before the House is $8,125,790. In addition to this there are appropriations made in other bills amounting to $3,000,000 in one instance and $1,647,000 in another, making in round numbers the grand total cost of the Department of Agriculture this year $12,772,790. This, when we first consider it, looks like a considerable amount of money. But it is nothing in comparison with the appropriations which are made for the other Departments of the Government, and in addition to that it is nothing in comparison to the wonderful benefit that comes to the country at large by reason of the great agricultural interests which these appropriations are intended to uphold and to sustain.

It should be a source of gratification and pleasure to every Representative upon this floor and to every patriotic American representative upon this hoor and to every patriotic American citizen, when we realize that the past year has been the most prosperous agriculturally ever known in the history of our country, and indeed, exceeds the value of the products in any other country in any year of their existence.

The report of the Secretary of Agriculture, while always interesting, is especially so this year, because he takes up and presents for consideration these facts and figures, showing this wonderful progress from an agricultural standpoint and this marvelous development that has taken place in the country.

I desire to call attention to this statement:

I desire to call attention to this statement:

Taken at that point in production at which they acquire commercial value, the farm products of the year, estimated for every detail presented by the census, have a farm value of $6,794,000,000. This is $485,000,000 above the value of 1905, $635,000,000 above 1904, $877,000,000 above 1903, and $2,077,000,000 above the census for 1809. The value of the farm products of 1906 was 8 per cent greater than that of 1905, 10 per cent over 1904, 15 per cent over 1903, and 44 per cent over 1899.

Farm products continue to be so far beyond the national requirements that the farm still overshadows the mill, the factory, and the workshop in providing exports. With his surplus beyond the nation's need the farmer has loaded the feets of oceans. These products were exported to the value of $976,000,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906—enough to build a high-class railroad halfway around the earth. This is the largest amount ever reached by agricultural exports for this or any other country, and exceeded by $24,000,000 the extraordinary value of 1901, which had previously been the record year.

Another matter for congratulation is given by the Secretary, as follows:

The farm real estate, as ascertained by this Department last year, increased in value $6,131,000,000 since the census year, or enough to raise the census value to $22,745,000,000. Domestic animals were worth $2,979,000,000, according to the census enumerators, and now they are estimated to be worth more than $4,000,000,000.

If real estate, domestic animals, other live stock, and implements and machinery are combined, the farmers' capital, as composed of these items, has increased by perhaps $5,000,000,000 since the census valuation, or about 40 per cent, and now amounts to perhaps $28,000,000,000.

This shows, gentlemen, how the farmer has helped himself and helped in this wonderful increase in agricultural products and in the marvelous development of farming lands, and has not only derived great personal benefit himself, but has shared his prosperity in the development of every other class throughout the country.

Another quotation from the Secretary's report:

Crops so large as to be beyond any rational comprehension have strained the freight-carrying ability of railroads.

We all know from actual observation and from experience that the railroads of the country are congested and are having great difficulty in carrying and caring for the products. lack cars, they lack engines, they lack tracks and other facilities to transact the business of the country. This has been brought about, as shown here, by this marvelous prosperity which has been dug out of the ground by these men who make their living in accordance with divine writ, "in the sweat of the face." This prosperity has been so general throughout the country that it has brought it not only to them, but to the other classes, who have shared it to such an extent that the railroads find that it is almost impossible for them to keep pace with the marvelous development which we have had. Therefore, it is a justification-in fact, it demonstrates the absolute necessity-of improving the waterways of the country in order that we may have the benefit of lower freight rates. Nothing will contribute more to the reduction of freight rates than the improvement of our

Hence this wonderful development which has so uniformly taken place demands the improvement of the natural arteries of trade given us by the God of Creation, and I hope and believe increased appropriations along this line will receive the approval of this House, and I know will receive the approval of the country. [Applause.]

Directly and indirectly the farmer has set up a demand for iron and steel that has exceeded the productive power of the chief producer among nations. His contribution to the supply of loan capital has been beyond calculation, and recalls the fact that the depression in the loan and investment market of 1903 was cleared away by the following crop.

Meanwhile the farmer has been a generous consumer, and has given powerful support to the market of the industrial producer, to the trade of the merchant, and to the wages of the working-

Indeed and in truth the farmer is a patriot and a public benefactor, because in helping himself he helps everybody else, and is the foundation rock upon which this whole structure stands, and it is by his brawn and honest muscle that the development of the country has been produced, not only in his own line, but in every other line.

These facts not only show the benefits that come to him personally and the benefits that come to others, but there is another benefit that is still more marvelous. That is the fact that without him and without his products the balance of trade would be against us and be in favor of foreign countries. Leave it to the factory, the workshop, and everything of that character and we would be in debt to foreigners on the balance of trade; but taking into consideration the agricultural products of the country in connection with the manufacturing products and all other products of the country, then the balance of trade is in our favor. The report continues:

The balance of trade in the international exchange of agricultural commodities continues to run in favor of this country by an enormous amount; for 1906 the agricultural exports exceeded similar imports by $433,000,000, an amount which places this year with the seven high years beginning with 1898 and much above the balance of 1905. This new foreign credit, which equaled that of a rich nation, was mostly transferred to large borrowers in this country for the purpose of enlarging their capital.

While the farmer placed to the national credit in other countries $433,000,000 in 1906, other producers, all included, secured a balance in favor of this country of only $85,000,000. During the last seventeen years the farmer has built up a balance of trade in foreign exchange of agricultural products amounting to $6,068,000,000, while all other producers find themselves at the end of the same period with a total on the debtor side of the account to the extent of $459,000,000.

Therefore, taking into consideration the manufactured products and all other exports, exclusive of agricultural exports, and the balance of trade would be against the United States in the sum of $459,000,000; but taking into consideration the agricultural products, they pay the balance of trade against us, which amounts to $459,000,000, and leave a balance in our favor of $6,068,000,000. I say, if with no other monument to the agriculturist of this country or to his productive capacity than that, it secures to him the approval of every patriotic American citizen, because he not only takes care of and benefits himself, as I said a moment ago, but he benefits every other avenue of trade throughout the country; and not only that, he brings a balance of trade in favor of our country as against the nations of the world, whereas but for him the balance of trade, taking everything else into consideration, would be in favor of the foreigners and against us. Now, taking into consideration these facts and figures which I have presented to you, which come from an authoritative source and a reliable one, I say that there is no reasonable appropriation that can be made for the purpose of developing the agricultural interests of the country that would not be justified and which ought not to be made. The trouble, in my judgment, is that we do not go far enough. I believe that the agricultural interests of the country should have larger appropriations in various lines than we are now giving to them.

do not believe that they ought to be hampered in any way whatever, but that the arm of the Government should go out cheerfully at all times, wheresoever any benefit can be bestowed, wheresoever any good can be accomplished by experiments of any kind, and by the development of the country in any way, to give the agriculturist of the country every possible benefit which we can extend to him. Instead of reaching out to him a parsimonious and a stingy hand, let us rather reach out to him an open and a full hand in order that we may help him, as he helps all others, as he helps and protects and takes care of the business interests of the country. [Applause.]

Now, there is one provision of this bill to which I want to call special attention, and that is to the change which is proposed to be made in reference to the distribution of seeds. In order that we may fully understand it, I ask the Clerk to read from the desk the provision as it appears in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read in the time of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and distribution of rare and valuable seeds: For the purchase, propagation, and testing of new, rare, and uncommon seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, foreign and domestic; for the rent of buildings (not to exceed $3,000); the employment of agricultural explorers, local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and all other necessary labor required in the city of Washington and elsewhere; the purchase of necessary office fixtures and supplies, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, fuel, gas and electric current, transportation, traveling expenses, and all necessary material for securing, testing, propagating, packing, and distributing the seeds, bulbs, trees, and so forth, above specified, $238,000. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to spend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, for the encouragement and advancement of agriculture and horticulture throughout the United States, through the systematic introduction of new, rare, or uncommon seeds, bulbs, trees, vines, cuttings, and so forth; in the establishment of new or the improvement of existing plant industries; in collating, digesting, reporting, and Illustrating the results obtained through the testing and distribution of new and rare seeds, bulbs, and plants herein provided for; and the Secretary of Agriculture is further directed to purchase such new and rare seeds, bulbs, plants, vines, and cuttings at public or private sale, and to arrange for the propagation, testing, and distribution of such seeds, bulbs, plants, and cuttings in such manner as he may deem expedient, obtaining, so far as practicable, the advice and cooperation of Senators, Representatives, and Delagates in Congress: Provided, That such seeds, bulbs, and plants shall be distributed to actual experimenters only for experimental tests, and that the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause a record to be kept of all persons to whom seeds, bulbs, or plants are sent, in order that reports on the results of the exp

Mr. CANDLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, when we reach this provision in the bill it is my purpose to move to strike it out and insert the provision of last year, which I will ask the Clerk to read in order that these two provisions may be compared in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read in the time of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds; For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; for rent and repairs; the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, gas, and electric current, traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $242,920, of which amount not less than $202,000 shall be allotted for Congressional distribution. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at a public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States. An equal proportion of two-thirds of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the Department upon the receipt of their addressed franks; such franks to be furnished by the Public Printer, as is now done for document slips, with the names of Senators, Members, and Delegates printed thereon, and the words "United States Department of Agriculture, every and the provided, That all seeds, bulbs, plants, and cut upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latiture shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided further, That $37,780 of which sum, or so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture shall direct, may be used to collect, purchase, test, propagate, and distribute rare and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants from foreign countries or from our possessions for experiments with reference to their introduction into and cultivation in this country; and the seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants thus collected, purchased, tested, and propagated shall not be included in general distribution, but shall be used for experimental tests, to be carried on with the cooperation of the agricultural experiment stations: And provided also, That $10,000 of the sum thus appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the erection of a suitable seed warehouse for packeting and mailing seeds on Congressional orders.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I have had these two pro-

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I have had these two provisions read from the Clerk's desk in order that they may appear in the Record, one following the other, so that the Members may have an opportunity to examine them and determine for themselves which provision they believe is best for the interests of the country and for the welfare of the agriculturist.

You will note that the provision in the pending bill provides for seed for experimental purposes. There will be none for general distribution at all. The same amount of money, practically, is appropriated under this provision as is appropriated under the general provision in the law of last year which has just been read, and which I expect to offer as a substitute for this provision in the bill. This bill provides for an appropriation of $238,000 for the purchase of rare seed in our own country and for importation of rare and uncommon seeds from foreign countries. After they get them, what do they propose to do with them? They say that they shall be distributed to actual experimenters only for experimental purposes. How many actual experimenters can you point out in your district now? If you were asked by the Department to furnish a list of such experimenters in your district to whom seeds might be sent, how many could you sit down and name as actual experimenters'

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If any ordinary farmer should write for rare seeds or bulbs to the Department and say that he wanted them for experimental purposes, do you not think he would get them?

Mr. CANDLER. No, sir; and I will tell you the reason why. A gentleman in my district wrote and wanted some cane seed sorghum seed. I wrote a letter to the Department and requested that they attend to it. They wrote to me that they had written to him and would correspond with him about it, and if they came to the conclusion that he would properly experiment with the seed furnished him in accordance with the directions of the Department, the seed would be sent. When I was down home I met this farmer, Mr. Wash Taylor, who lives about 4 miles distant from Corinth, Miss., my town, and I want to say that he is a splendid gentleman and a good farmer. He has made by farming money enough to buy and pay for his own land, and buy and pay for his own stock, farming implements, etc., and the necessaries of life for his family and some surplus. I asked him about the seed, and he said that they had sent him a blank to fill out and asked him questions that he couldn't answer, and he took it to a merchant and asked him to fill it out, and he couldn't answer the questions that were asked, and then he said that he tore the thing up, and that he never did get the seed. I said: "I wish you had sent the blank to me, and I would have gone to the Department and tried to get them to send you the seed." He said: "Well, I didn't want to bother you any more, and so I tore the thing up and concluded to do without the seed."

Now, if this provision is carried out it will mean exactly this kind of treatment all over your district, and all over mine, and all over the country. They will ask you to furnish them so many names that they may correspond with them and determine whether your constituents have sufficient intelligence to receive seeds and make experiments in accordance with the directions of the Department. It is an effort to increase the power of the bureaucracy, which is one of the banes of this Government to-day. [Applause.] That is the trouble that there is in it now. The public are depending on the representatives of the people to transact the business, but it is growing from day to day until the bureaus are saying what your constituents shall have, what my constituents shall have, and what they shall not have; and whenever they put their seal of disapprobation on your request, you are at the end of your row and you are becoming powerless.

It has got so on the floor of this House, as you well know, that when you call up any kind of a bill, I don't care what it is or what it pertains to, the question is asked about it if it has received the indorsement of the Department. If it receives the indorsement of a chief of some bureau or the head of some Department, it goes; if it does not receive that, it is a cause of condemnation, and we are getting so we are forced to rely upon that instead of exercising our own judgment and our own opinion in the matter.

Mr. COCKS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. COCKS. Has not the gentleman ever appealed to that same authority to back up a position that he has assumed?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes; because I realize the force of it on the floor of this House-that the Representatives here depend more upon the indorsement of some bureau chief than they do upon their own ideas and opinions,

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not the intention that each Member of Congress and each Senator shall receive an allotment of these fancy bulbs and plants and seeds?

Mr. CANDLER. The provision in the bill is that it shall be carried out with "the advice and cooperation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress;" but you will not be permitted to send out a single solitary package yourself.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Was it not the intention of the committee that all farmers who wanted to experiment and who were recommended by the Members of Congress would receive these fancy bulbs and seeds?

Mr. CANDLER. I presume not. I presume that those who voted for this measure did not have that intention in mind. I voted against this provision in committee myself because I be-lieved the result of it would be, if carried out, that the ordinary farmers in the country would not get the benefit of it. The reason I say those who voted for it must not have that intention in mind is because this language is used, that it shall be distributed to actual experimenters only for experimental purposes, and a man has to go into the experimental business.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the gentleman a question? Is it not true, under that provision he has just cited, it is vested in the Secretary of Agriculture the discretion as to whom or how many of these seeds or plants shall be distributed?

Mr. CANDLER. It certainly is true.
Mr. CLAYTON. If the Members of Congress are to have any share in the distribution, I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Candler] that we ought to have it as a matter of right in our representative capacity, without having to resort to the necessity of going to the head of a Department with hat in hand begging a favor for a constituent. Let us have it in our own right. [Applause.] Mr. CANDLER. I as I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Can not this be amended so as to accomplish that result?

If the majority of the House will agree with Mr. CANDLER. me. I think we will amend it so that it will accomplish the result we have had heretofore, and that is to distribute the seeds ourselves and send them to our constituents [applause] and not take your hat in hand, as the gentleman suggests, and go and ask it as a matter of grace or favor. Let us have it as a matter of law and of right. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Let me offer this suggestion. I do not say it would not happen, but this is possible. If it be true that these seeds and other special considerations, if you please, are used at any time for political effect, is it not possible at some future time for a partisan Secretary of Agriculture to single out some district where a political friend of his has a hard fight on hand and give him, if necessary, 400,000 packages of seeds and plants necessary to save his political life? Now, that is the sort of thing that we do not make possible. We want an equal distribution of such special provisions or encouragement that the Government has to hand out, and we want the same in our own right.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is possible under the present law.
Mr. CLAYTON. Yes; but under this law which it is now proposed to enact, it is not possible.
Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not possible?

Mr. CLAYTON. Under this law which it is now proposed to enact, it will not be possible. This discretion is vested in the head of a Department, and there is nothing more odious or hurtful in any civilized government than judicial discretion badly used, except one thing, and that is the discretion lodged in the head of a Government bureau at Washington. We know that this favoritism is practiced every day. Why, it cropped out this favoritism is practiced every day. Why, it cropped out here in the discussion of the Geological Survey appropriation. Take the maps, for instance, of the Geological Survey, and you find districts where the topographic surveys have been made and others where none has been made. You will find that cities have had topographic maps made of them—a species of favoritism—and we are asked to go further here to aid that species of favoritism exercised by the heads of bureaus. Congress ought not to permit it, and I hope it will vote down this proposition brought in here from the committee. I am in hearty accord with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from

Mississippi. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Now, I want to say further, Mr. Chairman, that this report says that there has been omitted from the bill by the committee the paragraph making appropriations for what is commonly known as the "Congressional free-seed dis-tribution." It has been omitted and this provision is substituted and reported; but I want to say that this was not substituted and reported by a majority of the committee at the meeting when the matter was considered. The subcommittee made a report to the full committee reporting the provision as it now appears in the bill. When that was presented to the full committee I made a motion to strike it out of the report. I offered as a substitute in its place the provision which I sent to the Clerk's desk and which I shall offer on the floor of the House as a substitute for this provision. On that I demanded a roll call, and on that roll call there were seven votes in favor of the substitute, the provision which I shall offer, and seven votes in favor of this original provision, and hence the provision to put in the free-seed distribution in the committee was lost upon a tie vote, and hence the committee was divided equally on the proposition; and this does not come here, then, so far as the members of the committee who were present at that time are concerned, with the indorsement of the committee, but it comes here because the parliamentary status in which the question stood before the committee at that time required affirmative action to strike out this and substitute the other. A majority of the full committee not voting for it, it being a tie vote, the proposition was lost in the committee on the tie vote, and for that reason this very provision is in this bill to-day instead of the other provision. The committee was equally divided——

Mr. WADSWORTH. To be perfectly fair, will the gentleman state by what vote this amendment was adopted in the committee?

Mr. CANDLER. I do not remember.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I remember; it was eight to six.
Mr. CANDLER. Then, there were two who voted for this as a final proposition when the other was lost on a tie vote.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to lines 9 and 10, on page 36:

Provided, That such seeds, bulbs, and plants shall be distributed to actual experimenters only for experimental tests, etc.

Is that the way it should read, or should it read:

That such seeds, bulbs, and plants shall be distributed to actual ex-perimenters only, for experimental tests, etc.

I think there might be room there for a construction that would put these seeds only into the hands of seedsmen, so that they could sell them to the rest of us on proper occasions.

[Laughter and applause.]
Mr. CANDLER. Yes; I think that is the conclusion that is entirely justified from the language that is in the bill and which has the unanimous indorsement of the seedsmen of the United States of America. They were before the committee in a body, advocating this very identical proposition, and, no doubt, in reply it will be said that that was followed up by the Department of Agriculture, who recommended this provision. is true, too. But the seedsmen when they appeared before us in the committee admitted that what had been charged was practically true—that they were acting in concert to prevent this other provision going into the bill this year.

They admitted that last year when it was left out they held that hurried meeting, which you heard discussed upon this floor, and to which I referred in a speech which I made on a former occasion, at which they organized to prevent this proposition going into this bill this year. It was said at that time that they proposed to use the press, and you will find copied in the hearings on this question broadcast extracts from one end of this country to the other, taken from the press, taken from college professors, taken from scientists, and people of that character, but you will not find a letter, I do not believe, in all the hearings from a farmer who tills the soil himself protesting against it. You will find in the hearings protests against it from agricultural associations, that is true, but, as my friend from Kentucky [Mr. James] said last year, that is from the agriculturists of the country who do the talking, but do not do the work.

Then when the seedsmen said last year that they were going to use the press the evidence shows conclusively that they did use the press to create a public sentiment in the country, and how did they use it? They came here and employed a man in this city who was a representative of the press, Mr. William Wolfe Smith, and he so testified himself before our committee that that was his business, that he was a newspaper correspondent, and he started out by saying that he was not a seedsman and was not interested in seeds, but a newspaper correspondent. Now, if the seedsmen wanted to create sentiment in the country by using the press, who would they secure in order to create that sentiment? Would they employ somebody who had access to the press, somebody who could use the press? They did not employ a seedsman. They certainly did not employ a farmer, but they employed a newspaper correspondent who was an expert in his line, and he evidently secured the publication of criticisms all over the country from one end of it to the other in order that he might create this sentiment.

I heard further-I did not know that when we had this hearing or I would certainly have asked about it-not only was this bureau, conducted by Mr. Smith, carried on and sustained during all the time last year and up to the present time, but that in addition to that, in order to get this adverse criticism in the newspapers, a news bureau was run in connection with it and free letters, purporting to give full information from Washington and knowledge in relation to the transaction of public affairs, were published. In other words, a newsy Washington letter was furnished free that went throughout the country and was published in the newspapers, and in it was always placed, so I am informed, a paragraph condemning the free distribution of seeds by Congress. And in that way possibly some of these adverse criticisms were obtained that were presented in the hearing and are printed in this pamphlet that lies on the desk before me. I say I have heard it; I do not state it as a fact. did not hear it until after the hearing, or I certainly would have inquired about it. But I have been informed from a reliable source that it is a fact and that is the way in which it was done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I would ask that I may be permitted to proceed.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman ten minutes more.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Mississippi may be permitted to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman may be recognized to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. CANDLER. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee and the House for this kind indulgence.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Candler] yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Davis]?

Mr. CANDLER. Certainly; with great pleasure. Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman from Mississippi is discussing this matter, I think, very fairly, but I think there is one matter he has omitted in connection with the testimony given before the committee by the various seedsmen who were there. It is unfortunate at this time that we have not the hearings. I understand they are not yet printed; at least, they were not a little while ago. But be that as it may, I would at this time like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] this question: Was not the question repeatedly asked of the various seedsmen who gave testimony before our committee what their principal objection was to the distribution of these seeds-that is, the Congressional distribution-and, finally, did they not admit that the seed distribution as heretofore given was valuable and important to the farmer, and did they not, upon a question addressed to them by myself, say that the seeds were of a good quality and were very beneficial to the farmer, but that their sole or chief objection was that by reason of the Government engaging in the business it interfered with their business from a pecuniary standpoint, and that theirs was a purely selfish motive in that it interfered with their business; also, that the sum of $60,000 or $80,000 that was actually invested by the Government for seeds had a tendency to, and in some instances did, bankrupt some of their concerns, although they admitted that their concerns did a business equal, if not greater, than $20,000,000 annually?

Mr. CANDLER. That, in substance, was the testimony given.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Candler] if on examination before his committee if Mr. C. F. Wood, of Louisville, Ky., testified that the $232,000 appropriated here for free seeds would have purchased 40,000,000 packages, and he said: "Forty million, at 5 cents, is how much?" And the gentleman from Mississippi answered him and said: "You can calculate it as well as I can." And Mr. Wood answered by saying, $2,000,000; is it not?" That is the amount that would have been taken from the people by the seed houses if it had not been for the Government distributing $232,000 worth of seeds to the people. A profit to the dealers in seeds of $1,768,000. It is not a matter of wonderment that they maintain a great lobby here to do away with this distribu-[Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. That is correct. And I want to call attention to another thing in this connection with reference to the seedsmen's position. This is a contest, absolutely, so far as that is concerned, between the people of this country who object to this distribution and the farmers of this country-by their Representatives and the farmers themselves. That is the issue which has been presented, and that is the question upon which we will be called upon to vote.

Mr. CLAYTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Clayton]?

Mr. CANDLER. Certainly.
Mr. CLAYTON. May I interrupt the gentleman to remark in that connection that the seedsmen have had a lobby here for some time, have lobbyists in Washington now, and that the farmer is dependent upon nobody to represent his interests except the Representatives here who come from the farming districts? [Applause.] God bless the farmer and the Representatives from those districts! We are going to have these

[Applause.]

[ANDLER. Well, I am one of their representatives. Mr. CANDLER. join freely and fully in "God bless the farmer," and I am going to stand by his interests.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. How about the farmers, the grangers, and the press of the country-not only the agricultural press, but the secular press?

Mr. CANDLER. I just discussed that a moment ago. I do not know whether the gentleman was present then or not.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption in connection with what has just been said by the gentleman from Alabama? I would ask the gentleman from Mississippi if it is not true that the Committee on Agriculture brought in prac-tically a similar report last year when there was no such lobby and no person claiming to represent the seedsmen coming before the committee and asking for such legislation? Is that true?

Mr. CANDLER. There was no hearing on the subject. committee, however, were about equally divided last year.

Mr. SCOTT. I simply wanted that statement to go into the RECORD, in justice to the committee, that the committee took precisely the same action last year when there was no solicitation upon the part of the seedsmen before that committee.

Mr. ADAMSON. What year was it that the seedsmen did not have a lobby here?

Mr. SCOTT. During the five years that I have been a member of the Committee on Agriculture, this is the first year that the seedsmen have been represented before that committee in any hearing.

Mr. ADAMSON. Were they not represented by the agricultural press?

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow me to ask the gentleman from Kansas this question: The last year and the year before last and ever since you have been here and since I have been here, is it not true that the seedsmen have loaded your mail and mine with letters, newspaper extracts, magazine articles, and other articles against the distribution of seed by the Federal Government? Have they not been lobbying all along, persistently and consistently, in that way, and through their literary bureaus?

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to enter a most emphatic negative to all those questions.

Mr. CLAYTON. I can state as a fact that I have received numerous newspaper extracts and letters from seedsmen for several years protesting against this appropriation, and fellow-Members around me on this side of the House and others on your side of the House have had the same contributions from their literary bureaus and the same letters from the seedsmen last year.

Mr. SCOTT. But no lobby.

Mr. CLAYTON.

Mr. CLAYTON. That was a lobby. Mr. WADSWORTH. What objection is there to that?

Mr. CLAYTON. I have no objection to it and I have no objection to their coming here lobbying. But I do not want what they have said to be invoked as an argument here against the farmer and his representatives here to defeat this meritorious distribution. You ought to listen to the appeals of the farmer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think that is fair. Any man has a right to petition and to protest. They have the right to come to Congress if they think their interests are wrongfully affected.

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly. Nobody disputes their right. The point I make is that the farmers have had no special champion of their rights and of their interests except such gentlemen as the distinguished and able gentleman from Mississippi and others of us from the great farming districts.

Several Members rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?
Mr. CANDLER. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Davis].

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just a word as to what my recollection is of the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scorr]. It is true that I have not been a member of the committee very long, but I say that during another session of this Congress, I do not think I saw any lobbyist in or about the committee and its sittings, but during the present session of Congress they were here with an attorney and appeared for several days, and the question arose upon questions put by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Candler] as to what kind of a lobby they had last year, and the statement was made that they could not state that they had any distinct amount of money, but I think the amount of $3,000, however, was broached somewhere during the conversation. But they said they did have a lobby two years ago. But this time they had organized a stronger lobby, and this was the first time they had ever appeared before the committee with an attorney to advocate their cause; and they did have an attorney and a very shrewd one. He did not deny, but, on the contrary, asserted that two years ago, and a year ago they had a lobby, but I wish to inform the House that if they had a lobby it was not as bold as it has been this year.

Mr. CANDLER. I now yield to the gentleman from Arkansas. Mr. MACON. I do not intend to make a speech in the gentleman's time, but the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Henry] a few moments ago interposed a suggestion about the agricultural papers of this country that are opposed to this free-seed distribution. I do not know all of the agricultural papers of the United States. I do not know what their policy is upon this subject, but I do know about one. There is an agricultural paper in the State of Arkansas that represents an organization of more than 80,000 farmers, and I do know that no single line has ever appeared in that sheet in opposition to the free distribution of seed in this country to the farmer. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. That is a good paper. I hope the people will continue to take it.

Now, just along the line that was suggested a moment ago by my friend and colleague on the committee [Mr. Davis of Minnesota], I want to call attention to the position taken by these seedsmen when they were before our committee. I pressed the question from the beginning to know about this concerted action that had been brought about. I asked the first man that went on the stand about it, and I continued to ask about it, and I want to give you a sample of some of the answers that they made and to show you, from their own testimony, how they stood on that question.

I quote now from the statement of Mr. Stokes. Mr. Cole asked him this question:

Mr. Cole. The statement was made on the floor of the House last year that some of the Members were in favor of the free distribution of seeds because of the trust existing between these seed firms of the United States. Is there any trust?

Mr. Stokes. There' is absolutely no trust whatever. It was attempted at one time, years ago, and it ended disastrously. It was absolutely impossible to have a trust in seeds.

Mr. Lamb. I have never heard of it.

Mr. Stokes. There is no foundation for it in fact whatever.

Mr. Candler. Is there not concerted action among those representing the opposition to the free seed distribution?

Mr. Stokes. Yes.

Mr. Candler. Have they organized headquarters here in Washington to oppose it?

to oppose it?
Mr. Stokes. Mr. Smith can talk to you about that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Smith was their attorney, was he not?

Mr. CANDLER. He represented them before the committee and introduced them one by one. Now, I want to read a little further:

Mr. Candler. Do you not know?
Mr. Stokes. Yes, sir.
Mr. Candler. You are one of the seedsmen?
Mr. Stokes. Gentlemen, I claim that as seedsmen we are bound to do it. We are bound to place our case before the people.
Mr. Candler. I want to know the fact about it.
Mr. Stokes. If we have a proper sense of the dignity of our business, we are bound to do what we can to present to the people in-general what we believe to be the facts.
Mr. Candler. I do not oppose any man doing what he deems legitimate and right, or any man doing anything that is legitimate and right to protect his own interests and sustain his own business; but I asked questions here yesterday along this line, and I want to know whether that is the fact or not, because when this matter was under consideration before the second vote was taken in committee I heard—and it was stated in the Washington Post—that there was a hurried meeting of seedsmen from all parts of the country at the New Williard Hotel, and that they determined there to use such means as they could, and to put up such funds as were necessary, to prevent the continuance of this seed distribution; and this paper stated, according to my recollection of it, that they expected to use the press to create public sentiment in that way. I heard that they raised $3,000 there then.

MIN. STOKES. No.

MIN. CANDLER. And that they have raised a fund since of $20,000.

MIN. STOKES. No, sir; that is all in the air.

Now listen:

Now, listen:

Mr. Candler, But you got concerted action. Mr. Stokes. Yes; or we would not have been here to-day together.

[Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. You stated a moment ago that Mr. Smith is in charge of your headquarters here at Washington to bring about such sentiment as he can in opposition to this appropriation.
Mr. STOKES. Yes.
Mr. CANDLER. And it takes money to do that?
Mr. STOKES. It takes some money to do that. It is perfectly proper and legitimate. We feel that a wrong is being done to us, and if we can do anything in a fair way to correct that wrong we are going to do it.

He said, "It takes money to do it."

Now, I want to show you the purpose of these seedsmen, and what they would like to have done:

Mr. CANDLER. You stated a while ago that you would like to see this money given to the Department of Agriculture to make these experiments with reference to the introduction of foreign and rare seed, and so forth and so on.

I asked several of them whether or not they were in favor of a reduction of this appropriation, and they said, "Oh, no; do not take it away from the Department; give it to them; and then they come in, don't you see, and say, "Why, don't take it away from us; of course not; but give it all to us, and give us the benefit of every bit of it, and do not give the benefit of it to any Member of Congress, in the distribution which has been made heretofore; but turn over this money to the Department absolutely, to be used in the way they see proper." That is the plan suggested by the seedsmen and recommended by the Department.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. CANDLER. Just a moment, and then I will yield. Let me finish the point I am talking about. I want to show you the position of the seedsmen. Then I will yield.

Mr. CANDLER. You stated a while ago that you would like to see this money given to the Department of Agriculture to make these experiments with reference to the introduction of foreign and rare seed, and so forth, and so on. Do you agree with the gentleman—I do not remember who it was now—who stated a while ago that as soon as these seed experiments were made and the benefits were derived from them and they were given to the people, and the seed should become to a certain extent common seed throughout the country, then you would oppose the further distribution of that seed by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. STOKES. Yes.

Not only did they oppose the distribution of seed the seed the country of the

Not only did they oppose the distribution of seed through the Members of Congress, but they would absolutely oppose the distribution of them by the Agricultural Department itself. Their proposition is, first, to stop the distribution by Members of Congress, and then later, when the Agricultural Department distributes seeds throughout the country and they become to a certain extent common, then they propose to stop the Agricultural Department from sending them out, and do not want any seeds sent out by the Government at all.

Now listen. Mr. Stokes answered that question "Yes."

Mr. CANDLER. Then you would favor the distribution by the seeds-

Mr. Stokes. Yes; I think that would be eminently proper,

Of course he thought it would be eminently proper.

Mr. CANDLER. In other words, you want the experiment made by the Department of Agriculture at the expense of the public for the benefit of the seedsmen of the United States and not for the benefit of the

Was there any escape from that conclusion? There was none. Mr. Stokes said: "No, sir; it is for the benefit of the people.

There is no such thing as benefit to the seedsmen."

Oh, no; according to Mr. Stokes, it would not benefit the seedsmen of this country to prevent the distribution of seed; it would not benefit the seedsmen to enact a provision so that it would be impossible for anybody to get seed from anybody else but the seedsmen.

They didn't want to cut down the appropriation, you know; they didn't want that done; they wanted that continued to the Department, and so it is made here at $238,000, while the appropriation last year was $242,000.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

That it is not a proper function of government to furnish seeds? That is the objection that was made in the beginning to this distribution, but the system has grown up, and there probably will never be a proposition to abolish this distribution of vegetable seeds that will not be accompanied by a proposition that will appropriate at least an equal amount of money to distribute other seeds. Now, is there any greater objection from the stand-point of principle toward the distribution of seeds under the amendment that the gentleman proposes to offer than there is to the principle in this bill as reported by the committee?

Mr. CANDLER. The principle is exactly the same.
Mr. GARRETT. And those who would support the bill as it stands will simply vote to take the distribution away from the Representatives'

Mr. CANDLER. The only difference is that they would take it away from the representatives of the people who distribute it fairly throughout their districts to their constituents. That is the way I distribute mine. They would take the distribution away from the Representatives and confer it upon the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GARRETT. Then the only proposition upon which we are asked to vote is the method of distribution, and the principle is not involved in any way in it?

Mr. CANDLER. Not at all; it is as to the method of distribution, and that is all there is in it.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if these seedsmen claim that the seed being distributed by the Department of Agriculture at that time was inferior to those sold by the seed dealers?

Mr. CANDLER. No; the evidence is strong that they are the best seeds that can be obtained; they have to be tested and have been tested and found to be true to type and strong as to vi-tality. They are required to come up to the highest standard in type and vitality.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. In these hearings did anybody claim that the seeds distributed would cost the people any more than if purchased from seedsmen?

Mr. CANDLER. No, sir; they did not. On the contrary, the testimony clearly shows that if purchased of the seedsmen they would cost a great deal more.

Mr. JAMES. That they would cost $2,000,000 if purchased of the seedsmen, and they only cost $238,000 when distributed by the Government.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Did the gentleman ever hear any man who wanted garden seeds for his own use object to the Government distributing the seed?

Mr. CANDLER. Never. I never had an objection of that sort myself.

Mr. CLAYTON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. CANDLER. I will yield to the gentleman.
Mr. CLAYTON. I want to ask the gentleman if I understood I want to ask the gentleman if I understood from the testimony that he read here that the committee proposition in the pending bill did not save one cent to the Government, but provides for the same appropriation as last year, the only difference being that there is a change in the distribution of the seed? Under the law as it now stands so many are allotted to each Representative and he distributes them. Now, it is proposed in this bill to turn over the whole power of the distribution of seeds to the Agricultural Department and take it away from the membership of this House?

Mr. CANDLER. That would be the result.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then the committee proposition is not in the interest of public economy?
Mr. CANDLER. No.

No. It is not for the interest of the farmers, and Mr. CLAYTON. again I say, God bless them, let them have these seeds. plause.]

Mr. CANDLER. The appropriation last year was $242,000, and the appropriation in this bill $238,000.

Mr. COCKS. The gentleman says that is the difference. Is not there quite a difference between the method of distribution, and also the character of the seed will be different, will it not?

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, yes. Under this provision it proposes to limit it to rare and uncommon seeds in this country and the importation of rare and uncommon seeds from foreign countries. Mr. COCKS. And also the propagation of our own known varieties of uncommon seeds.

Mr. CANDLER. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. I want to suggest to the gentleman, for the purpose of placing Kentucky right on this distribution of garden seeds, that I notice the first witness here is Mr. C. F. Wood, who is the representative of the seed house of Wood, Stubbs & Co., Mr. CANDLER. Certainly, with great pleasure.
Mr. GARRETT. When you come to the fundamental objection to this seed business, if there be an objection, is it not this:

of Louisville, Ky. I have heard it said by some gentlemen that the farmers' organizations of various States are opposed to the free distribution of seeds, and I have heard it said, and I beof Louisville, Ky. I have heard it said by some gentlemen that the farmers' organizations of various States are opposed to the lieve that fact is in the hearings, that the farmers met in Lexington, Ky., and presented resolutions there, which were passed, but they concealed from the committee the fact that those resolutions were introduced not by the farmer who tills the soil with his own hands, not by the farmer with the smell of newplowed earth upon his garments, not by the farmer who brings the harvest from the field, but by this kid-gloved individual, C. F. Wood himself, who represents the seed house of Wood, Stubbs & Co., who was there, and who presented these resolutions for the farmers of Kentucky, when he never plowed a fur-row in all his life. I deny the right of this gentleman to speak for the honest farmers of Kentucky when he is not one of them. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. That is a fair sample of the farmers, in my judgment, who are protesting against this free distribution of Mr. BURNETT. Did a single farmer appear before your committee to make any protest at all?

Mr. CANDLER. Not one. Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not there was any evidence before the committee as to what are these rare and uncommon seeds they propose to distribute?

Mr. CANDLER. That is to be left to the scientists and agriculturists in the Agricultural Department to select.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Was the gentleman given any information at all as to what they proposed to do along

Mr. CANDLER. Not a particle, except they said they would to a certain extent be like the 500 packages of novelties that were given to the Members a few years ago, that the seed which would be distributed under this might be prepared to some extent like they were, and a limited number sent out under the direction and with the advice of Members, but that none would be sent out by the Members of Congress themselves.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that these rare and uncommon seeds they propose to distribute are things that are confined to a narrow section of country, or to warm sections, or some particular climate or locality, and would not be for general distribution?

Mr. CANDLER. Not knowing what these rare and uncommon seeds would be, I am at a loss to give the gentleman definite information on that subject.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the Department of Agriculture is to confine itself to the purchase of rare and uncommon seeds, what was the use of an appropriation of $238,000? Why was not that amount stricken out, or a large bulk of it.

Mr. CANDLER. The seed men all recommended that the appropriation be retained for the Department, and I presume the Department wanted it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then the purpose is to give the seed men the market and take the benefits away from the farmer.

Mr. CANDLER. I am just going to say now, and I want to call special attention to this fact, that they have already been engaged in experiments with rare and uncommon seeds under the provisions of the bill as it has existed heretofore; that they can continue that kind of work to the degree that is necessary if the amendment which I propose to offer is adopted in the House. I wrote Mr. Galloway on the subject and asked for in-formation, and I have here his reply, which appears in the hearings:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., December 11, 1906.

Hon. E. S. CANDLER, Jr., House of Representatives.

House of Representatives.

Dear Mr. Candler: I have yours of 10th instant in reference to information regarding the seed distribution. I expect to be present myself at the hearing to-morrow, Wednesday.

I can send no additional data to what was furnished last year, as there have been no specially new developments. Inclosed is copy of letter addressed to you last year; also of one sent to Mr. Tawney, signed by the honorable Secretary.

Special emphasis should be put on the fact that we are not spending $242,000 for ordinary grain seed, but that the work is divided into three groups:

1. The securing, handling, and distributing of miscellaneous garden and flower seeds, grapevines, strawberry plants, ornamentals, etc., $132,754.73.

2. The securing and distributing of compressively as the securing as the securing $132,754.73.

2. The securing and distributing of comparatively new or little-known kinds of various field and forage crop seeds, such as cotton, corn, alfalfa, etc.; the improvement of the same by breeding and selection, and the general upbuilding of agricultural industries through such work. For this work we expended last year $72,385.27.

3. The introduction and dissemination of new and promising seeds and plants from foreign countries and the building up of new industries as the result of the work. Last year we expended $37,780 for this work. I will be glad to explain verbally any further points in reference to the matter at any time.

Very truly, yours,

B. T. Galloway, Chief of Bureau.

Thetefore, under the provisions of the bill as it was passed last year, this very thing could be done, and I propose to offer exactly that provision this year as a substitute for this provi-They carried on experimentation with rare and uncommon seeds purchased in our own country and rare and uncommon seeds imported from foreign countries, when the seed was distributed through the Members of Congress, paying $132,000 in round numbers for the Congressional free-seed distribution, $74,000 in round numbers for the propagation and distribution and experiments in rare and uncommon seeds produced and found in our own country, and $37,500 to import rare and un-common seed from foreign countries. So under the provisions of the bill as it passed heretofore each and every kind of this work has been done and can be done in the future; therefore, as was suggested by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Livingston] a moment ago, $238,000 might be extravagant to be appropriated for the purpose of investigation, experimentation, of the rare and uncommon seed, and limited to that line because prior to this time the amount that has been used for these two purposes under the bill as previously prepared and passed was in round numbers $110,000—$72,500 for home-produced seed and $37,500 for foreign seed, which made that $110,000. Now it is proposed under this provision of this bill to appropriate $238,000 to do identically the work which has been done under the other appropriation for $110,000.

Mr. SIMS and Mr. LAMB rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To which gentleman does the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. CANDLER. I yield to my colleague [Mr. LAMB] for a moment.

Mr. LAMB. Should this amendment prevail, what will become of the provision carried in the other bill for the distribution of flower seed, and how will you and I send our pretty girls any flower seed?

Mr. CANDLER. We will not have any flower seeds to send to the pretty girls, and they will look longingly with their bright and smiling faces, anxiously desiring the flowers, but we will be compelled to say "No" to the sweetest, noblest, and best of all God's creation, a pure, beautiful girl. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Except a white-haired old lady, who is just as sweet and lovely. Mr. CANDLER. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi, what excuse can we give when we go home if we knock out the appropriation which gives the per capita of this country 2 mills, having increased our own compensation 50 per cent on the floor of this House, what excuse shall we give our constituents?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should say one was right and the other was wrong.

Mr. CANDLER. I do not think any man can offer any excuse to justify himself at all when he runs his hands into his pockets and looks the honest old farmer in his face and acknowledges to him that he had the increased salary in his own pocket for which he voted and was enjoying the luxuries, the pleasures, and comforts derived therefrom, and then say to him that while I did that for myself, I took away the single package of garden seeds that has heretofore been sent to you.

Mr. SIMS. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman state to the House how he voted on the salary question?

Mr. CANDLER. I voted against it.
Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: If the bill as reported by the committee stands, there is $238,000 to be used for the same purposes that $110,000 was used last year. Is that correct?

Mr. CANDLER. That is correct.

Mr. SIMS. Now, was there any evidence before your committee to show that there was any need to increase this $110,000 appropriation to $238,000, or that $238,000 could profitably be expended along the line for which the $110,000 was expended a year ago?

Mr. CANDLER. I think it could be much more profitably expended by dividing it as it has been divided heretofore. have no doubt but what the Department can use the $238,000, and will use the $238,000 in case it is left in the bill as it is now, but as to the profitableness with which it will be used I am not advised, because there was no evidence on the subject.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I wanted to know. Was there any evidence before the committee showing a demand for such use to the extent of more than double the appropriation for last

Mr. CANDLER. No, sir; there was not; on the contrary the printed estimates will show the fact that the original provision was in the estimates just like it was last year.

Mr. SIMS. Then why did the subcommittee, and afterwards the full committee, double the appropriation over and above the estimate for that particular purpose?

Mr. CANDLER. I am frank to say I voted against it in the committee myself, because I wanted to keep the amount of money in this bill and I wanted the appropriation recommended by the committee for that amount of money, and I believed that when it came to the House this other provision would be inserted and no more money would have to be asked for. That is my reason.

Mr. CLAYTON. Has there been any complaint of the excellent distribution of the excellent seeds by the excellent head of the distribution bureau, Professor Galloway, except the complaint made by the seedsmen?

Mr. CANDLER. None that I have ever heard of from any source whatever. [Applause.] I never heard of any opposition, as I said a moment ago, on behalf of the people. never received a single solitary protest in all my life from a I have received thousands upon thousands of requests from them asking me to send seed to them. I do not get a mail now, not one, but what in that mail I have requests for seed from the farmers of the country, garden seed and field seed, and they ask me for a great many varieties that I can not furnish, because I am not given them by the Department to distribute, and I am asked for flower seed by the ladies in almost every mail, and I keep a sack of flower seed in my office and I keep a sack of garden seed in my office so that I can respond to those requests the day they come to me and send them to them when I am asked for them. [Applause.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANDLER. With great pleasure. Mr. SHEPPARD. Will he not be will Will he not be willing to extend the scope of the distribution in the amendment he intends to offer by including field seed as well as garden seed?

Mr. CANDLER. With pleasure, if it is not subject to a point

Mr. SHEPPARD. It will not be subject to a point of order any more than the present one.

Mr. CANDLER. I do not object, but would be glad to see field seed included. I offer the amendment in the language of the last bill because I want a clear-cut and clean issue between this provision and the provision of last year, which we are entirely familiar with from experience as well as observation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is not the gentleman willing to fix it to include field seeds?

Mr. CANDLER. If the gentleman will offer an amendment including field seeds, I will put it in without any hesitancy what-Now, then, I believe this to be the scope of these two provisions. I have tried, in the discussion of the provision which is now in the bill and the provision which I expect to offer as a substitute, to be entirely fair. I have earnestly endeavored to stay within the record as the testimony was developed in the

I have tried to state frankly and honestly the position that we occupy in reference to it, because I believed that the House was entitled to know that. When it comes here, of course, with this provision in the bill, and with the report made, and no minority report, but for an explanation upon that line everybody would have a perfect right to believe it had received the unanimous indorsement of the committee. Therefore I think it is entirely proper to explain that it did not receive the unanimous indorsement of the committee, but that the committee was equally divided upon the question, half of it voting one way and half voting the other.

Mr. LAMB. Does not the gentleman think this very provision in the bill is subject to a point of order?

Mr. CANDLER. No, sir. Does the gentleman mean this provision here?

Mr. LAMB.

Mr. CANDLER. I am not an expert parliamentarian. I am inclined to believe it would be subject to a point of order. There are provisions in it, I am sure, that are subject to a point

Mr. LAMB. If the gentleman will compare it with the other he will come to the conclusion that it is subject to a point of

Mr. CANDLER. Unquestionably there are provisions in it, I think, that are subject to a point of order, because it is new

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that if no one else does so, I propose to raise a point of order on a large portion of

Mr. CANDLER. Unquestionably the provision in here providing that these seeds and bulbs and plants shall be distributed to actual experimenters only for experimental purposes, and that the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause a record to be kept by everyone to whom seeds and bulbs and plants are sent, is new legislation in an appropriation bill, and in my judgment subject to a point of order. But I am not, as I said a moment ago, an expert parliamentarian. That is my judgment only in reference to that matter.

Now, then, I hope, gentlemen, that you will take occasion to examine in the Record, and I will put it there for that purpose, the provision in the bill which will be printed in the Record tomorrow morning, and then the provision which I propose to offer as a substitute for it, and, as I said at the outset, take the two and compare them and see which you believe is for the best interests of the people to whom these seeds shall go, the best method of getting them to the people, and the best method of justly distributing them to all people alike. If you come to the conclusion that the Department of Agriculture, through the Bureau of Plant Industry, can make a better, more equitable, and more just distribution than the representatives in Congress of the people themselves can make, then, of course, I take it that you will vote for the provision as it now appears in the bill; but if you come to the conclusion you know your own people better than the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, that you can distribute the seed to them with greater accuracy, with more equity, in greater fairness, and better than he can distribute them, then I take it you will vote for this provision which I offer as a substitute and which has been in the bill heretofore.

I referred in the commencement of my remarks to the prosperity that exists throughout the country among the farmers. I want to discuss for a short time the development of the South. It is a source of gratification and pleasure to us in that section of the country that the agriculturist is coming to his own once more. [Loud applause.] I am glad to see him taking an interest in his own affairs and fixing, to a certain extent at least, the price of the product that he toils to produce, and not leaving it to Wall Street or to the stock gamblers, the cotton gamblers, the wheat gamblers, and to the gamblers in "futures" price of his product, and say he shall take that, without any regard to its actual and intrinsic value. [Applause.]

It is a source of gratification they are standing together, saying to the people of this country and saying to the people of foreign countries that we propose to fix the price of our products, and if you want them at that price you can buy them if you have the money, and if you do not want them we are able to take care of them and able to keep them; we will build warehouses in which to protect our products from the storms and weather and preserve them for future sale. I hope they will continue to stand shoulder to shoulder, man to man, for their own protection and their own welfare. Before they took this position we sold the cotton crop of 1900 for $387,000,000. Now, with the farmers standing together, we sold it last year for $667,000,000. By reason of this action on their part, fixing the price of their own product and not leaving it to the grain gamblers and the cotton gamblers and gamblers in futures to say what it shall be, they raised the price of that product nearly $300,000,000 and brought prosperity to that section of the country, and in that way brought prosperity to every section of the country, because the prosperity of one section is the prosperity of them all,

There has been established an absolute standard of money in this country, and that standard is gold. I am frank to say that I believed in the free coinage of both silver and gold at the ratio of 16 to 1, without the consent of any nation on earth, and believe it yet under same conditions. But the standard was fixed as the gold standard by law. What has done more to sustain it than any other one thing is the cotton crop, which is exported to foreigners and brings gold to our country. Last year more than a million dollars of cotton each day, Sundays and holidays included, was exported to foreign countries and sold for gold. To be entirely accurate, last year $401,000,000 worth of cotton was exported and sold and brought that amount of gold to the United States in exchange for that product, which was produced in the Southland.

Cotton is the great leveler in commercial and international exchange; and when I say that I speak advisedly, because that which can control the markets of the world as to money must, to a certain extent, control the destinies of the country and become a great leveler in the transactions between those countries. [Applause.]

I want to tell you that it is a fact that the cotton production in the last five years has amounted to more in dollars and cents than the total world's production of gold and silver both combined. Listen! In the last five years the total value of the world's gold and silver production was $2,578,852,000. The total value of our cotton crop in the last five years was $2,974,000,000.

Therefore, the total production of cotton in five years has amounted to more than the total value of the world's production of both gold and silver combined. That being true, then cotton is the great leveler in international trade. We say that cotton is king. Some people say, "No; iron is king." It is said that Mr. Carnegie made the remark that iron is king, and Mrs. Carnegie promptly replied, "If iron is king, then coal is queen." We say that the cotton crop is the king of the commerce of the world, and we do not admit anything to the contrary; but admitting, for the sake of argument, that iron is king, we stand in just as advantageous a position in reference to that great product as we do in reference to the cotton.

We find by investigation that there are in the Southland today 62,500 square miles of coal, while in England and Germany combined there are only 12,000 square miles and a little over. So within the borders of the Southland we have not only more coal land than both Germany and England combined, but more than all of Europe put together. So if iron is king and coal is queen, how does the country stand that possesses unquestionably that which is the king, namely, king cotton, and then possesses a majority of the iron lands of this country and a majority of the coal lands of this country? Having the two kings and the queen in the Southland, we ask nothing of anybody else. [Applause. 1

One other thing and then I shall be done. The one other great product in this country is timber. And do you know that to-day more than half of the standing timber in the United States is south of Mason and Dixon's line? So when we have the cotton, when we have the iron, when we have the coal, and when we have timber, all within that section of the country, no wonder that prosperity has perched upon our banners; no wonder that we are happy and rejoicing. [Applause.]

Forty-five years ago those of the South who were old enough to be away from home were engaged in the conflict that was When those men returned to their homes then in progress. they found devastation and destruction on every hand; but standing brave, courageous, and noble as they were, asking no favors and no concessions, the only thing that they ever have asked and the only thing that we ask now is that we shall be permitted to work out our own salvation under the shining canopy of God Almighty's heaven, trusting to Him for guidance, protection, support, and comfort; looking to Him for the sunshine and the showers, for those things that will bring from the earth the production which will yield happiness, peace, and joy to our people. To-day we are coming back to our own. We are reaching the point where we can take care of our own affairs without asking anything from anybody anywhere. Only a few years ago we had to go to Wall Street or to some commercial center, to some great banking institution, to obtain the money with which to transact our business; but last year the people of the South were able to market their own cotton without asking a favor from any source, without asking a loan from anywhere; and this prosperity that has come over the Southland has permeated all this country of ours.

William D. Kelley said years ago that the prosperity of the South was the prosperity of every section of the country; and that is absolutely true. He looked forward to this day and saw with prophetic eye that the time would come back again when the Southland would blossom like the rose and when joy and happiness would be round about. That time has come. It will continue, and there is a greater time ahead of us for our people, if they will care for the heritage given to them and not waste it or fritter it away. We have stood upon the chivalry of our manhood and the purity of our womenhood, and upon that foundation we have builded a superstructure that has towered heavenward and shines in the very presence of God [Great applause.]

But we are all prosperous, I am glad to say, and I am glad that the time has come, and I hope it will grow stronger every day, when we shall have an interest one with another throughthis great, broad land.

When I came to Congress I said it was my purpose to be the Representative not of one section against the other, but to do anything I could and to exercise any influence I might possess and all the ability God had given me to develop and upbuild every section of our country from one end of it to the other. [Great applause, ]

I have tried to pursue that course since I have been here. Whether I have succeeded or not I do not know, but I expect to pursue that course in the future. I want to see this the greatest country, as it is, on the earth. I want to see this great country more powerful as the years go by. I want to see us all stand together as one people, working each with the other, looking wherever good may be done, and lending a helping hand to any section or any State or any community wherever the Government can constitutionally and lawfully extend its aid for its upbuilding and for its development. When that time shall arrive then we shall all consult in reference to governmental affairs. There was a time, and to some extent it existed a long time, when we were practically shut out from the councils of the Republic. Now we are back, and let us all be together, let us consult one with the other, and all work together for the advancement, the upbuilding, and glory of our beloved country; yes, let us all stand for an indissoluble Union of indestructible States, all clustered around and bearing allegiance to the Stars and Stripes, the emblem of liberty, our country's glory. Let the Angel of Peace kiss the frown from the brow of the Republic, and let the smile of an approving Heaven rest upon a great and reunited people. I am profoundly grateful to the membership of the House for your close attention and indulgence. Please accept my thanks. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Lowden having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 17099. An act to authorize the refund of part of fines imposed on the vessels Sotie R, Mathilda R, and Helen R; and H. R. 21677. An act to amend an act granting to the Davenport Water Power Company rights to construct and maintain a canal, power station, and appurtenant works in the Mississippl River in Scott County, Iowa.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 24541. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I now yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scott].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Mississippi, with his usual eloquence and emphasis, with his characteristic acuteness and adroitness, has presented the view of the minority of the committee on this immortal seed question, a question which, like the poor in Scripture, we seem to have always with us. It had not been my intention or expectation to participate in this discussion, but in view of the fact that I hold with the majority of the committee in the report that has been made it would not seem out of place for me to state the reasons which influenced the majority in bringing in this report. I shall try to state these reasons briefly and dispassionately, because I believe they will appeal to the judgment of this House.

If we were of the opinion expressed by the gentleman from Mississippi, that this is a contest between the seedsmen and the farmers, his speech would have been unnecessary, because not one vote could have been obtained upon the floor of this Chamber for the proposition opposed to the one that he supports. we can not agree with that opinion for a great many reasons, some of which I wish to present to this Chamber.

The majority hold, in the first place, that what has been known as Congressional free-seed distribution is unwarranted by any sound principle of government. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], in reply to a question, stated that there was no difference in principle between the proposal in the bill now before the committee and that involved in the Congressional free-seed distribution. I am sure that upon reflection he would not make that statement, for he is a man of too keen intelligence to fail to note the distinction between a proposition authorizing the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture to distribute plants and seeds for experimental purposes with a view to promoting the agricultural interests of the country, and a proposition to make a present to individual American citizens of a small amount of common ordinary garden seeds which they can obtain at any crossroad. I insist that as a matter of principle, of governmental policy, it would be absolutely impossible to differentiate between a proposal to distribute seeds to individual citizens and a proposal to distribute jackknives or lead pencils among individual citizens; and I maintain that as a matter of governmental policy it is wholly indefensible to take the money from the public Treasury, put there by taxes levied upon all the people, and spend it in making presents to a few of the people. It is that fundamental proposition upon which the majority of the committee rests its opposition, in the main, to this distribution.

In the second place, we opposed it because we do not believe that it is authorized by law. The law creating the Department of Agriculture contains these words:

That there shall be established at the seat of Government of the United States a Department of Agriculture * * * to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and

The Department is constituted for the purpose of distributing new and valuable seeds and plants, not common and ordinary garden varieties of seeds and plants. That is absolutely the only authority in the statutes of the United States upon which this distribution rests, and I do not believe that upon that authority any warrant can be found for the practice of general free seed distribution.

Mr. ZENOR. I desire to ask the gentleman what he cites from?

Mr. SCOTT. I cited the act organizing the Department of Agriculture, approved May 15, 1872.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman answer a question at this time?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does not that act also authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to buy seeds that may be improved by transporting them from one place in the country to another?

Mr. SCOTT. The paragraph in the act to which the gentleman from Indiana refers is doubtless section 527, which reads as follows:

SEC. 527. The purchase and distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture shall be confined to such seeds as are rare and uncommon to the country, or such as can be made more profitable by frequent changes from one part of our own country to another; and the purchase or progagation and distribution of trees, plants, shrubs, vines, and cuttings shall be confined to such as are adapted to general cultivation and to promote the general interests of horticulture and agriculture throughout the United States.

I do not see that the paragraph I have just read changes in any degree the evident intention of the original act under which the Department was organized.

In the third place, the action of the majority of the committee was taken in consonance with the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture and those under him who are immediately connected with the work of the Bureau of Plant Industry. Secretary of Agriculture, in his annual report for 1903, made the following recommendation with regard to securing and distributing miscellaneous garden and flower seeds, and I beg to emphasize this and impress it upon the minds of those who seem to be of the opinion that nobody but the seed men are protesting against this distribution; that nobody representing the farmers is in favor of discontinuing it. There is not a Member on this floor who does not accord to the distinguished Secretary of Agriculture the most single-minded devotion to the interests of the farmers of this country, and his recommendation would seem to me, based as it is on a lifetime of experience as an actual farmer and on nearly twelve years of experience as Secretary of Agriculture, to be well worth the serious attention of the membership of this House. He says:

With regard to the securing and distribution of miscellaneous garden and flower seeds, the fact remains that this work does not accomplish the ends for which the law was originally framed. These seeds are the best that can be obtained in the market, but from the fact that large number of packets are wanted the seed obtained can be of standard sorts only, such as are to be found everywhere for sale in the open market. As there is no practical object to be gained in distributing this kind of seed, it seems very desirable that some change be made. To this end it would seem wise to limit our work entirely to the securing and distributing of seeds, plants, etc., of new and rare sorts.

And it is precisely in line with that recommendation that your committee has brought in the paragraph which is now in the bill.

Mr. LAMB. May I interrupt my colleague a moment there? Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. LAMB. Can the gentleman account for the changed opinions of the Agricultural Department from last year when this discussion was up and now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why, there has been no change.

Mr. SCOTT. I don't remember that there has been any change.

Mr. LAMB. Yes; and I will produce the letters, and I will refer the gentleman to Doctor Galloway's testimony.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was because contracts had already been entered into which could not be broken. This bill was under consideration in June last, and the seeds for this year, which will be distributed now, were under contract and they could not be changed.

Mr. LAMB. My friend the chairman misunderstands me. When these hearings were had last year we had Mr. Galloway before us, and I will turn to the record. I have just been reading it a little while ago, and it is a strong indorsement of the law as it now stands.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman from Virginia must have forgotten that the recommendation of the committee last year was to strike out the entire paragraph in regard to the distribution of seed.

Mr. LAMB. No; I have not forgotten it.

Mr. SCOTT. I think it is entirely likely that Doctor Galloway did offer an adverse opinion to such action as that, but I am very certain from conversations which I have had with both the Secretary and Doctor Galloway that they have been of the opinion for many years that the real interests of agri-culture would be much better advanced by the distribution of new and valuable varieties.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. In that connection I would like to ask a question.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. This question having been before Congress a number of times, where it has been passed upon by representatives of the people speaking in favor of this distribution, does not the gentleman from Kansas think that the Secretary of Agriculture and Doctor Galloway also should accept the verdict that has been rendered by the representatives of the people, and stop logrolling and lobbying against this sort of legislation?

Mr. SCOTT. I am quite sure that upon reflection the gentleman from Missouri will not accuse either Doctor Galloway or the Secretary of Agriculture of logrolling and lobbying for any legislation.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I will not call it that, but they are constantly making reports which are read here in opposition to this proposition, when year after year Congress, representing the people, have declared that they favor that policy. Now, would it not be better for those gentlemen to carry out a policy that the people have declared for rather than spend their time always in trying to obstruct policies which the people favor?

Mr. SCOTT. In reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri, I wish to say that the Department of Agriculture has always carried out with scrupulous care the direction that has been given by any act of Congress. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri, however, and also the other Members of the House, to the fact that the proposition that comes before us this year is in a very different shape from what it was last year, or what was brought before the House on any preceding year of which I know. Last year the proposition was to strike out of the agricultural bill entirely any appropriation for the distribution of plants and seeds of any character, whether new or valuable or common and ordinary. the proposition is to retain the distribution of new and valuable varieties of seeds and carry that forward as it has been done under authority of preceding acts while we strike from the bill only that part of the old law which related to free distribution of common and ordinary varieties of seeds. this presents a very different problem indeed, and I think because it presents a different problem that the officials of the Department are entirely right in coming before the committee when they are sent for (and they never have volunteered to come, they always wait to be called) and giving their opinion as to what plan would bring the best results.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is this new plan now another campaign by which the seedsmen hope to flank our position on the other proposition of having the free distribution of seeds?

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to say that the seedsmen are not in any degree responsible for the provision which is offered in our present bill. That provision was drawn in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, I presume by Doctor Galloway or perhaps upon consultation with the Secretary himself. And I would like to say further in this connection, while I have no criticism to offer upon the seedsmen for sending their representatives before the committee, that it was the unanimous opinion, I think, of my colleagues on the committee that they made a very poor showing of a very good case. I do not believe there was a man on the committee whose vote was influenced in any degree by any facts which were brought before the committee by this representation from the seedsmen. I wish also to make the further statement that the committee, it seems to me, does not deserve the insinuations that have been cast against it of being influenced by a lobby which had no right to be here. It is a matter well known to all Members of this House that the labor organizations of this country maintain a lobby here in Washington. It is well known that other interests maintain a lobby here.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Do the farmers?

Mr. SCOTT. I will come to that. No one criticises the labor unions or other interests for seeking to secure fair legislation. These men come before the committee openly and aboveboard to represent their interests, as they have a perfect right to do. The gentleman from Missouri asked if the farmers have a lobby. I desire to say that the farmers of the United States are well represented before the Committee on Agriculture. A majority of the members of that committee are practical farmers.

They call before them every year the Secretary of Agriculture, who is the attorney at large, I think I may say, for all of the farmers of the United States. His aids and chiefs of the different bureaus are brought before them. Every year there come before us officials of the agricultural colleges, representing the farmers certainly, if any body of men can be said to represent them; and I believe it can be truthfully said the interests of the farmers are most carefully represented before the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scott] stated that it had always been the purpose and the practice of the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into execution the wishes of the Congress. I here wish to remind the gentleman of this fact, that my colleague [Mr. MURPHY] at the last session of Congress offered an amendment to this bill, which was adopted, providing for an appropriation of $5,000 to be expended in the Ozark regions of Missouri for the investigation of the apple scab, a disease known to horticulturists and orchard people. I beg to inquire of the gentleman why that amount was not expended, as directed by the action of the Congress of the United States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman know it was not ex-I remember the item perfectly.

Mr. RHODES. I was advised on Saturday that not one cent of it had been spent.

Mr. LEVER. As a matter of fact, was it not stricken out in the Senate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The item was in the bill. I remember it perfectly, and I am astonished when the gentleman asserts that it was not expended.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman should understand that it was only last year that the appropriation was passed. There are four seasons in the year and-

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rhodes] quite sure of his statement?

Mr. RHODES. I am quite sure. Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman from Illinois, I will say that four seasons of the year have fully come and gone, and if there are other seasons to which he refers, I know not what they be.

Mr. MANN. The four seasons have not come and gone since the agricultural appropriation bill became a law at the last ongress. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. Mr. WADSWORTH. It has only been in operation six months.

Mr. MANN. The Agricultural Department doubtless has not had time to make preparation to carry on this investigation after the first of the fiscal year, and, in my judgment, it does not run out until the 1st day of next July?

Mr. RHODES. With that explanation I feel satisfied.

Mr. MANN. It may be a continuing appropriation.
Mr. SCOTT. Concurring in what has been said by the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Illinois, I wish to say I have no doubt that the particular work to which reference has been made will be carried out. There yet remain nearly six months of the period for which the appropriation was made, and I think upon application to the Secretary the gentleman will get a satisfactory answer to his question.

Mr. JAMES rose.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES

Mr. JAMES. If I understand the gentleman's contention, it is that this is no fight between the farmers on one side and the seed sellers on the other?

Mr. SCOTT. That is my contention.

Now, I would like to have the gentleman en-Mr. JAMES. lighten this House as to who is paying William Wolfe Smith to maintain headquarters here in Washington and send letters to Members of Congress like the one I have in my hand.

I have no doubt that the Seedsmen's Associa-Mr. SCOTT. tion is paying the salary of Mr. Smith, the same as the labor organizations are paying the salaries of men to represent them.

Mr. JAMES. Are they doing that from patriotic motives to benefit the farmer, or from sordid motives to benefit themselves? Mr. LILLEY of Connecticut. What has that got to do about

Mr. JAMES. A good deal "to do about it." Mr. LILLEY of Connecticut. That has no relevancy to the expenditure of this money.

I am not responsible for the gentleman not see-Mr. JAMES.

ing that point.

Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. Chairman, I must protest against a colloguy in my time in which I do not participate. fluenced by selfish motives, and I have no doubt that the seedsmen themselves would be the first to admit they are maintaining an organization for the purpose of benefiting themselves. think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. James] would hardly deny they had that right.

Mr. JAMES. Yes. That is why I wanted to get the point before the committee, so that the Members might understand this agitation against the farmers having free seeds-that it did not start with the farmers themselves, nor was it started on behalf of the farmers, but it was started by the seed producers and seed sellers so that they could benefit themselves by selling to the people the seeds which are now furnished by the Government.

Mr. SCOTT. I think I can present some facts before I close that will convince the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. James] and the other members of the committee that he is entirely mistaken when he says that the agitation started with the seedsmen and not with the farmers themselves. I do not refer to it at this time, because I want to proceed in an orderly manner, but I will reach it in a few minutes.

Mr. JAMES. I will be glad to see it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. SCOTT. Along this line?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Along the line of the seedsmen and something Doctor Galloway should have said.

I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota Mr. SCOTT. [Mr. Davis].

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. In the hearing which we had during the recent sessions of the Agricultural Committee, this testimony was given. I am reading from the beginning on page 32 and ending on page 33. It bears directly upon the point as to who is the greatest beneficiary under the present system that we desire to keep in vogue. I asked the following questions of Mr. Davis. You would like the Department to go to the expense of introducing or propagating this new variety of seeds and then allow the seedsmen to sell them to the farmers at high prices. Is that it?

Mr. Forbes. I beg your pardon, Mr. Davis. We do not look for that assistance. We have been able to take care of ourselves in that way

Mr. Forres. I beg your pardon, Mr. Davis. We do not look for that assistance. We have been able to take care of ourselves in that way all these years.

Mr. Davis. I understood that the first expense in bringing forward a new seed you wanted to get rid of, and have the Department do that, and then allow you to distribute them at high prices?

Mr. Forres. No; we are willing to go on as we are going; but if Congress wants to assist us to the extent of helping us to find new, rare, and valuable varieties, such as we can not reach, we would be glad to have the assistance. You know, we travel far and near, going to Europe, to California, and sometimes to Australia, and have been hunting for newer varieties for decades. We are doing it, I think, fairly well.

Mr. Davis. But as soon as the seed becomes generally known do you not want Congress to stop distributing it and let you distribute it—as soon as it becomes well known?

Mr. Forres. We have a perfect right to get the same seeds that Congress will be instrumental in bringing into the country. We have a right, in common with the general agricultural public, to procure some of these new, rare, and valuable varieties that the Department will be instrumental in bringing in, and I hope they will be able to show us the way better than we have been doing it thus far.

Here is the nub of what I wanted to get at:

Here is the nub of what I wanted to get at:

Mr. Davis. But I am getting at the result when the Department gets the seed established. Then you want them to drop the distribution? Mr. Forbes. Certainly.

That, I claim, is the point. As soon as the Government goes to the expense of it, not the distribution, then the seedsmen want to distribute it. Is not that the idea of the seedsmen—to let the Department furnish it?

Now, on another point, reading from the hearing of Mr. Gal-I understand the gentleman says that this has been a distribution of simply common varieties of seeds. In the hearings of January 25, 1906, on pages 232 to 235, Doctor Galloway made the following statement:

made the following statement:

Mr. Galloway. I can make a statement now; yes.

I want to say that of the 477 Members—and I come in contact with nearly all of them in one way or another at some time—this is the first statement of that kind that has been made—that is, that there are more complaints about the worthlessness of the seed than there are about the goodness of it; because I do not see how anyone who took the ordinary precautions with the seed we send out could help from getting results. We send out seed that must necessarily be better than the ordinary seed that the seedsmen can secure.

Mr. Scott. Why?

Mr. Galloway. For the reason that we buy our seed in this way: In the first place, a considerable portion of the seed is grown for us out of what we call our own stock. We know the full history of the stock. We get, for example, a pound of lettuce seed of a high quality, and it is true to name. We can take that pound of lettuce and turn it over to a reliable man in California and get 100 pounds that is absolutely true to stock, and in order to make it true we send a man into the field where that lettuce seed is grown and have him rove the field—that is, we eliminate all of the lettuce before the seed have gotten away from the desirable characters. We have for that work a man who has had more experience than any other man in the United States—Mr. W. W. Tracy, sr. His special business is to keep track of our stock. That is the stock we start with. That is done for the greater portion of our seed, and the other we buy out of stock or in the open market under these conditions: We buy to-day, for example, a lot of onion seed. That onion seed, we provide in the contract, must not only be true to name, but must have a certain standard of vitality. It is sent here, and more or less of it is tested in our laboratory, and if it does not come up to our standard it is rejected.

If it is found it is not true to name—and we can only determine that after our field tests are made the following summer—we always withhold a certain amount of pay to cover that; but then during the following summer we make field tests at the Arlington farm and six or seven other places, in cooperation with the experiment stations, of all the seed that enters into the Congressional distribution. We test it for vitality in the laboratory, and we test it for trueness to name in the field.

Mr. Scott. Where is your seed grown?

Mr. Galloway. The seed is grown all over the United States.

The point I make is this: First the seedsmen want to get

The point I make is this: First, the seedsmen want to get them, but they do not want the Government to distribute a single package of the seed after establishing a good variety, but to allow the seedsmen to take them and make money out of

Mr. SCOTT. I would have admitted at once, if the gentleman had intimated what his point was, that the seedsmen are prompted by selfish motives in the conduct of their business, as all other men are; that it will be of advantage to them, and they will always take advantage of it, to have this work carried on by the Government. But I maintain that this fact should not in the least degree alter the policy of the committee or of Congress. We are legislating for the whole country, and if our legislation is wise for all the people, we should not withhold it because it may happen to help the seedsmen along with the rest of the people. Under the provisions of former appropriation bills the Government has been spending nearly half of the appropriation for seed distribution in the exploitation of new and valuable varieties, and the seedsmen have had opportunity to take advantage of that fact. They may get a little greater advantage of it if the appropriation is increased, but it will be merely to the extent of the increased appropria-It will not change the principle under which we are operating in any degree.

Now, I wish to go back to the line of argument which I had in my mind in the beginning. I said that we proposed a new plan, first, because we believed the old plan was contrary to sound governmental policy; and, second, because we believed it was contrary to the acts of Congress establishing the Department of Agriculture. I followed that up by giving an extract from the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, showing that he condemned the free-seed distribution, and recommended the plan which has been brought in here by your committee.

I wish now to call the attention of the committee to an expression by Doctor Galloway, the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, who appeared before us to present the paragraph now under discussion. You all know, of course, that Doctor Galloway is the Chief of this Bureau, has long been in the service, is one of the ablest men in the Department, and upon introducing himself he stated that he came there representing the views of the Department in this case; that he had talked it over carefully with the Secretary and was sure what he had to say would meet with the approval of the Secretary.

He was most emphatic in appealing to the committee to adopt the paragraph which is now in the bill; and in response to a question from the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Brooks] he made a remarkable statement as emphasizing the value of the work that might be done under this paragraph. Mr. Brooks asked him if he would not give a specific example of the benefits that had accrued to the agriculture of the country by reason of the introduction into the country of new types of seeds and plants, and suggested the wilt-resisting cotton, the seedless orange, and the durum wheat.

Mr. Galloway responded that in his judgment the introduction of these three plants had been worth up to date at least $25,000,000 to the people of this country.

Mr. Brooks inquired of him:

Did you ever know of any practical advantage that came to the agriculturalists of the country by the distribution of lettuce, radishes, onlons, and beets?

And the question seemed so preposterous, in view of the sentiments which Doctor Galloway had expressed, that he replied:

You are not asking me that question?

And Mr. BROOKS said:

No: I will withdraw that.

And there was laughter. Everyone who was in the committee room understood perfectly well that Doctor Galloway did not answer the question as to the good that had resulted from the distribution of common seeds, because there was no good, because there was not any such result, in his judgment.

Mr. Brooks followed his line of questions a little further. said:

In your judgment, Doctor Galloway, is there any Congressional district in this country where you can not profitably expend your energies along the line laid down here?

And Doctor Galloway answered:

Not one.

So that we have the Secretary of Agriculture and the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry emphatically on record as favoring the change which the bill proposes to make.

Now, I call your attention to some other sentiments in this same line. The question has been asked here a great many times in this discussion, who was here to represent the farmers, and what evidence was there to show that the farmers were in favor of the discontinuance of the Congressional distribution of seeds and the change to the new plan that has been proposed. I hold in my hand the printed report of the hearings that we had on this subject before the Committee on Agriculture, and on page 69 I find a summary of the expressions from agricultural colleges on this question, and these brief extracts, only a sentence or two from each man quoted, occupy more than two pages of small type in this volume of hearings. I will read just one or two, to give you a sample of the sentiment expressed.

Mr. George B. Ellis, secretary of the Missouri State board of agriculture (may it not be assumed that he represents the farmers?), says:

I am heartly in sympathy with the movement to discontinue the free distribution of seeds to farmers. Of my own personal knowledge I know that 99 per cent of the farmers who receive these seeds do not appreciate them and receive very little benefit from them.

Similar statements appear here from the director of the North Carolina Experiment Station; from Mr. A. M. Ten Eyck, professor of agronomy, Kansas State Agricultural College; from Mr. Alfred Atkinson, of the Montana Agricultural Experiment Station; from Mr. W. H. Stevenson, professor of soils, Iowa State College and Experiment Station; from Mr. E. Mead Wilcox, botanist of the Alabama Agricultural Experiment Station; from professors of the University of Illinois, University of Nebraska, University of Minnesota, the Minnesota Experiment Station, and scores of others, which I will not take the time of the committee to read. All declare that, in their judgment, the Congressional seed distribution is absolutely of no value to the agricultural interests of the country, and demand in the name of the formors that the system be changed. So much for the of the farmers that the system be changed. So much for the sentiment of agricultural college workers.

Now, the printed report of this same hearing presents the view of the granges and other farm organizations of the coun-I read from resolutions of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, representing 800,000 farmers, adopted at Denver,

Colo., in November, 1906:

Whereas Congress annually appropriates $242,000 for the purchase of field, flower, and garden seeds, most of which are of a common variety;
And whereas the Department of Agriculture at Washington expends as much more in their distribution, making, in round numbers, a half million dollars;
And whereas the farmers of the country receive comparatively no benefit from it, we believe the money could be more wisely expended: Therefore he it.

efit from it, we believe the money could be more wisely expended: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we reaffirm and readopt the resolution unanimously adopted by the National Grange at its session held at Portland, Oreg., in November, 1904, which is as follows:

"We are unanimous in the conclusion that while the Agricultural Department at Washington should exert due diligence in its research for new food, forage, and other plants, and while there is something that can and perhaps should be done through the exchange of seeds, we can not conclude otherwise than that the general and free distribution of the many kinds and varieties of garden and field seeds by the Department is without benefit in any important sense and should be abandoned."

So you see that as long ago as 1904 the national grange had taken exactly the same position on this question, long before this alleged lobby had been organized or any newspaper bureau had been employed to concentrate sentiment upon Congress

The Farmers' National Congress, composed of a thousand delegates-can anyone assume that these men did not represent the real sentiment of the farmers, that the farmers composing this national congress were speaking without knowledge of the views of their constituents? That organization, which met at Quincy, Ill., last autumn, adopted this resolution:

Resolved, That we are opposed to the system of seed distribution as now conducted by the Federal Government, but believe in the work of exploring foreign countries for such seeds and plants as may be profitably introduced into this country, and recommend that the money expended for seed distribution as now conducted be added to the fund for maintaining American seed and plant explorers in other countries under direction of the United States Department of Agriculture, and the distribution of the same among the agricultural experiment stations of the country for practical test.

The paragraph we have introduced in the bill follows almost identically the line suggested by this resolution. I could occupy the time of the committee for hours in reading similar sentiments, but I do not want to weary you, and I shall not do so, although I have before me resolutions from practically every State grange in the United States and from innumerable subordinate granges cordially approving the purpose that is now before the House. If gentlemen will examine the hearings on this subject, they will find that from page 99 to page 114, inclusive, fifteen pages of solid type, the space in these hearings is occupied in giving the names of organizations and of newspapers and in noting the writers of individual letters in support of the proposition which is brought before your body to-day.

I want to read a few lines to show the sentiment that prevails in my own State. Here is an extract from a letter written by J. W. Berry, president of the board of regents of our State agricultural college, himself a practical and highly successful farmer, now a member of the State senate, and a gentleman who has been connected with farming all of his life. He surely can speak for the farmer, and he says:

This political seed sowing is entirely discredited by practical farmers. I am sure there is not a farmer in this county who would defend it or even apologize for it.

Mr. Frank C. Pomeroy, a member of the Kansas house of representatives, says:

I am a farmer and as such have received many packets of seeds, but would far rather buy my own from reliable seedsmen. The free distribution is a farce and should be abolished.

I have a number of letters here from the editors of country newspapers in my State, not reprints of manufactured editorials that have been sent to them for publication, as has been suggested, but personal letters that they took the time to write with their own hands. One of them is Mr. J. E. Junkin, who is at present the president of the National Editorial Association. He says:

The newspapers of Kansas regard the distribution of garden seeds by Congress as a joke. The appropriation devoted to improving plants would really bring some benefit to the agriculturists of the country.

These are only samples of expression, which could be duplicated by the hundred, to show that the country press, which must surely reflect the sentiment of the farmers, upon whom it depends for support, regards the old plan as a farce and a

The agricultural press of the United States also is a unit in support of the proposition now before the committee. At any rate, there was not brought before the Committee on Agriculture the name of a single agricultural newspaper in opposition to that proposal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to finish. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be allowed to finish. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the committee for its courtesy, and shall endeavor not to abuse it. I think I have shown in bringing before the House some of the testimony which was brought before your committee, that the agricultural sentiment of the country is practically unanimous in opposition to the old plan and in support of the new plan. I do not question for a moment that there is a demand for these seeds. I think if we were to advertise throughout the country that Congress was going to buy $238,000 worth of jackknives, we would have an application or two from our constituents to share in that distribution. But the fact that there is an application for something which can be obtained without money and without price does not warrant us in reaching the conclusion that the agricultural interests of the country would be advanced by yielding to that demand.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield for a ques-

Mr. SCOTT. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have wondered since the free distribution of Congressional seeds, as it is popularly termed, has been eliminated from this bill, why the entire appropriation has been recommended. If there is to be no saving by the change, I am one who believes it would be better to continue after the old fashion. I want the gentleman to state if he regards it as necessary to appropriate $238,000 for the purchase of new and rare seeds and bulbs, to be used only by experimenters? of that large sum necessary after the popular distribution of garden seeds shall be eliminated?

Mr. SCOTT. In reply to the gentleman from Indiana, I would say that I do not regard the appropriation of that large sum as absolutely necessary any more than I would regard the appropriation which we make for the effort that is being made to exterminate the gypsy moth in Massachusetts as absolutely necessary. The country could get along without either of them. The sum was fixed as named in the bill for the reason that the Department officials came before the committee and told us they could use that amount to advantage in promoting the interests of the farmers of this country.

A good deal of emphasis was laid by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Clayton] in the colloquy with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Candler] upon the idea that under the proposed plan the Secretary of Agriculture may concentrate his distribution of plants and seeds into one district or into a few districts and in that way make this authority a political bludgeon. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the paragraph in last year's bill, the paragraph which has been in all bills for many years, contains precisely the same provision as far as the distribution of seeds is concerned. There is not a line or a word in the bill of last year that would prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending every package of the Congressional seeds into one district. I will not take up the time of the committee to read the language, but any gentleman who desires to do it can read it and verify my statement. Under the language of last year's bill the Secretary is not required to distribute these seeds pro rata, giving to each Member of the House and Senate his proportionate share. It is left to the discretion, to the sound sense, and to the honesty of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CLAYTON. I would ask the gentleman to read the language to which he refers.

Mr. SCOTT. I refrained from reading it only because I did not want to occupy so much time.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman's conclusion may be correct, but I doubt it very much, and I would like to have him read the language.

Mr. SCOTT. Here is the language:

An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture, after the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents or mailed by the Department, upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight, etc.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does not that language say that there shall be an equal proportion to the Members of Congress and the Sentors? Does it not bear out the contention I made and still make, and has not that been the uniform practice of the Department of Agriculture to so construe that law?

Mr. SCOTT. It has undoubtedly been so construed. I had not believed that the wording warranted that construction, that it necessarily compelled it. It may be the gentleman is right.

Mr. CLAYTON. Is not the gentleman, in view of the section of the law that he has just read, willing now to take back his assertion that he made a while ago? In all frankness and candor, was not the gentleman mistaken in his conclusions made a moment ago, and does he not now in all frankness and candor retract the same? [Laughter.]
Mr. SCOTT. I will say frankly that I had not observed the words "equal proportion.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is the reason I wanted the gentleman to read it. I know that the gentleman, like myself, wears glasses and sometimes he misses a word, and hence I wanted him to read it. Now, I ask the gentleman to be frank and candid in accordance with his usual custom and to admit that he was in error.

Mr. SCOTT. I have just said that I had not observed the word "equal" in glancing hastily over this language, and if it affords the gentleman any satisfaction, I hope he will notice that I have made this admission, and I am sure he will agree that my former statement was not made with any intention to mislead the House. Indeed, it was not essential to the argument I had in mind to make, and that is this: That there can not be vested in any authority great power for good which does not carry with it a possibility of a great influence for evil. proposal now before the House gives to the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to distribute these seeds and plants for experimental purposes in his discretion, and of course it is true, as the gentleman has suggested, that he might concentrate all of that distribution in a small section of the country, but I am sure that neither the gentleman nor any Member of this House would believe for a moment that the Secretary will do that.

I wish also to call attention to what I think is the undue emphasis that has been placed upon the difficulties that might arise under the proposal here to place these seeds and plants in the hands of actual experimenters. Doctor Galloway outlined to the committee the plan which he proposed to follow in the event of the enactment of this legislation. He said, in brief, that he would ask a Representative, for example, to supply him with the names of a hundred men among his constituents whom he could recommend as intelligent and substantial farmers, and to those men he would send the seeds and plants with which he wanted to have experiments conducted.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Does not the gentleman think it would make it very interesting for those of us who want seeds if we had to select a hundred names out of our constituency of men who are farmers?

Mr. SCOTT. I think it would be just about as interesting as it is now to select 12,000 men from amongst 45,000 families.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Oh, that is not a fair statement of it.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not see any difference.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Besides that, we sometimes get more than twelve thousand. As the gentleman knows, there are a number of gentleman on the floor who come from cities and who have no occasion for seeds. They are left to the Secretary, and he distributes them.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman must acknowledge no matter how industrious a Member of Congress may be or how generous he may be in buying seeds around the corridors of this Capitol, as it has been stated before our committee has been done, there must yet remain a great many people in his district who can not be favored with this gift, so that it seems to me that as a mere selfish proposition there would be no advantage in the one case over the other. But I certainly hope that the gentleman and all Members of this House will consider that we are trying to legislate here for the benefit of agriculture in the United States of America and not for the benefit of ourselves, not for the benefit of individual farmers who may receive from us, if they are on our lists, the grand total of 15 cents worth of garden seed every year.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman permit a question now?

Certainly. Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What good reason is there that these rare seeds and bulbs and plants should not be allotted to us for dis-

Mr. SCOTT. The idea of the Secretary is that better results can be obtained if those seeds and plants can be sent to men who will agree in advance to experiment with them and report upon those experiments.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Then we will have to rely upon the discretion or authority or generosity of some bureau of the Depart-

Mr. SCOTT. I do not see that we will at all; and in that same connection I wish to say that I differ with the gentleman from Mississippi, who insists that this plan would lead further in the direction of bureaucracy in the Department. The Department will ask us for the names of farmers whom we are willing to recommend as good experimenters, as intelligent, active men who will take these seeds and plants, grow them according to directions, and report the results.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why should not the Secretary allot so many, as he does now of strawberry plants, grapevines, and things of that sort, and let us select the people to whom they

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman from New York will remember that on the present allotment the understanding is, and, indeed, it is set down in the law, that those receiving these seeds shall report the results, and he knows also that they never do. The Secretary believes that the plan which he has suggested would be more certain to have careful work done with the seeds and plants, and thus bring better results.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Those people are not expected to report the results. We get an allotment arbitrarily and we send them out with no expectation of getting these reports.

Mr. SCOTT. The law directs that a report should be made. Mr. DRISCOLL. Why should we not have the same privilege with these others which are substituted for the common seeds

That is a matter which rests wholly with Con-Mr. SCOTT. Of course if the Congress wishes and decides to have the distribution made that way a simple amendment to this paragraph will bring that result; but I am assuming that Members of this House will prefer to trust in the wisdom and discretion of the Secretary and allow the new plan to be put into operation under such directions as he may prescribe.

Mr. JAMES. Does not your bill provide that the Secretary, in complying with the direction of Congress, shall have discretion whether or not the seeds he desires to send out will be adaptable to the soil and climate of a particular locality?

Mr. SCOTT. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. JAMES. Now, does the gentleman believe that the Secretary of Agriculture is a better judge of citizens to whom seed ought to be sent in his district, and the soil in his district, and the climate in his district, when perhaps he has never been there, than the gentleman is himself?

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to say that the Government of the United States has spent a great many hundreds of thousands of dollars in carefully surveying the soil of the United States to think that the gentleman will find officials in the Department of Agriculture who have a more intimate and accurate knowledge of the agricultural possibilities of his own district than the gentleman has himself.

Mr. JAMES. And whether or not farmers would keep their word and reply to these things and make experiments? Does the gentleman think the Department knows enough about human nature and about the different men throughout the district?

Mr. SCOTT. The proposal of the Secretary is to ask the Representative to recommend a certain number of farmers. Secretary then enters into correspondence with those farmers, sends them blanks to fill out, or in any other way that he may prescribe, attempts to make sure that they will cooperate with him, and, upon receiving that assurance, he then begins the experiment.

Mr. JAMES. It is discretionary with him, at least?
Mr. SCOTT. It is absolutely discretionary with him. It can not be done in any other way.

Mr. Chairman, I have occupied the floor much longer than I intended to, and I shall not delay the committee further. I merely venture, in closing, to express the hope that the Members of this body will take into account the fact that the new provision complies literally and exactly with the law, that it has the indorsement and recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture and the bureau chiefs under him, that it has the approval of the agricultural press of the country, the approval of the national and the State granges, and all the other agricultural organizations of the country, and the approval in the very largest measure of the local press of the country, which certainly must reflect the sentiment of the people upon whom it depends for support. Through every avenue of expression open to them the farmers of America have made clear their opposition to the old plan and their approval of the new. this reason, and being absolutely clear in my own conviction that the new plan will bring immeasurably greater benefit to agriculture than the old, I support the pending measure, and earnestly hope it will be retained in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, in view of my somewhat lengthy remarks of a year ago in opposition to the Congressional distribution of cheap and common seeds, when the last agricultural appropriation bill was before the House, I do not care to occupy the time of the committee with remarks which would necessarily be largely a repetition of the argument then made. I will, however, take the privilege of using the time allowed me in presenting the objections to the distribution of common varieties of seeds from the view point of a prominent seedsman, Mr. Charles Francis Wood, of Louisville, Ky., as stated by him before the House Committee on Agriculture a

The original appropriation for the free distribution of rare seeds and plants (while it was confined strictly within the limits of the law) was never objected to by us, and I may say that the question of the appropriation was not taken up by the seedsmen at first at all, but was taken up by the National Grange, an association of farmers of the United States. They agitated the question of this Congressional free distribution of seeds themselves, realizing that many parts of it, as it was carried out, were not doing the country any good. They recognize that it was a misuse of public funds, that it was doing the country no good, and that it was injuring a legitimate private business.

The question, as I understand this matter, is whether this appropriation shall be made, or if it is made, shall it be confined to the strict limits of the law. The law says this act was for the dissemination of new and improved varieties of seeds; and we, as seedsmen, and the country at large, the farmers, do not question this enactment or the wisdom of it. We say, however, gentlemen, that as the law has been construed in the last eight or ten years and as a portion of it is devoted to injuring a legitimate business, that portion of it should be carefully considered by Congress and stricken out of the appropriation. This appropriation is divided up into three classes: First, the Congressional free distribution of seeds; second, the dissemination of new and improved varieties of seeds; and, third, the exploitation of foreign countries with a view of finding new seeds for introduction to our citizens. These last two classes we, as seedsmen, and the country at large do not object to; but we do say that the first clause of this appropriation is a serious menace and injury to our business, and that it does the country at large no good. It is an appropriation of $132,000 to be spent in common garden seeds, which are put in small packages and sent indiscriminately throughout the country to a list of constituents and at the

There is evidence to prove that the combined agricultural press is solidly opposed to this free distribution; evidence that every grange, every horticultural society, every board of trade, every interest pertaining to the farmer has passed resolutions condemning it. All of which shows that a large majority of these things have been done voluntarily on their part. These are not printed petitions, set forms. Some are written in the crabbed handwriting of the old farmer who can hardly write, who has gone to the trouble of writing out a set of resolutions to present to his little meeting, asking that this Congressional free distribution of seeds be stopped. Others are editorials and mapping the crop zones of the country, and I am inclined taken from the best and most influential of all the press of this country, condemning this appropriation and showing up the folly

These extracts from letters, resolutions, and editorials are attached as an appendix to my remarks, and are worthy of the careful consideration of every Member of this House.

I also include a summary of the statement of Dr. B. T. Galloway, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, likewise made before the Committee on Agriculture, giving the views of Secretary Wilson and the Department of Agriculture.

In reply to an inquiry made by Chairman Wadsworth, Doctor Galloway said:

Doctor Galloway said:

I shall present the Department's view and represent the Secretary in this matter, because I talked the problem over very fully with him, and the policy of the Department on this whole subject, I think, is pretty well understood. After all that has been said before the committee regarding the distribution of miscellaneous vegetable and flower seed it is not necessary to add very much from the standpoint of the Department. For the past six years the Department has sent out annually about 7,000,000 packages, of 5 papers each, of vegetable seed, and has never had any of these seed left on hand. During the six years the number of packages sent out has remained the same, while the cost has decreased about 12 per cent. This has been accomplished through improved methods of handling the work, by the introduction of modern machinery, and by doing away with the middleman in contracting.

The Department really does the work which was formerly done by the contractor, and thus saves the profit paid to him. In this way we have been able to save about $30,000 annually in the last six years, and have used this money in connection with the distribution of rare and uncommon seeds.

machinery, and by doing away with the middleman in contracting.

The Department really does the work which was formerly done by the contractor, and thus saves the profit paid to him. In this way we have been able to save about $30,000 annually in the last six years, and have used this money in connection with the distribution of rare and the contractor of the number of packets of seeds put up is one wholly dependent upon the kinds bought. If we bought certain kinds of seeds we could supply each Member of Congress with 20,000 packages of 5 packets each, but they would necessarily be very cheap kinds. If, on the other hand, we attempted to secure only novelties, i. e., very would be limited to 3,000 or 4,000 packages each, so that the number of packages is a matter wholly of the kind of seeds that we secure. We have endeavored to secure the very best quality of seed of the kind that is obtainable, and I think that I can say fairly that the seeds we are now sending out are better than those we sent out six or seven yet must be understood that these seeds are of the average ordinary kind that the seedsmen themselves handle, and if, as I said before, we attempt to secure the novelties, which the seedsmen also handle, they would cose us eight or ten times as much.

I think, well understood for sometime, and had stribution has been quite fully set of the seeds are the heart that can be obtained in the market, but from the fact that large numbers of packets are wanted, the seed obtained can be of standard sorts only, such as are to be found everywhere for sale in the open market.

The Secretary further say:

The Secretary and of the Department in this whole to make the open market.

The pa

practicable, cooperate with the State experiment stations and practical farmers, fruit growers, and others, in order that the seeds, bulbs, and plants may be distributed with due regard to their adaptability to the various soil and climatic conditions prevailing in the United States. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby also directed to prepare annually a report showing what the results of the distribution have been."

That directs the Secretary, first, to secure these rare and uncommon seeds, both domestic and foreign, and to distribute them to actual experimenters only; to distribute them in cooperation with the Members and Senators and the State experiment stations, and each year publish a report on the results of the work.

The Field and Farm, Denver, Colo.: We have been hammering on this question a good many years, and it is our intention to keep hammering. We trust the fight against this pernicious practice will prove effective.

Farmers' Review, Chicago, Ill.: We hope that concerted efforts in this direction by all interested will result in doing away with the evil.

The Farmers' Guide, Huntington, Ind.: The Farmers' Guide has been opposing this for several years.

House and Garden, Philadelphia, Pa.: We are entirely in sympathy with the movement against this free distribution.

The Modern Farmer, St. Joseph, Mo.: The Modern Farmer has been talking against free seed for the last ten years. We think the Government has no business distributing free seed or free anything else.

Farm, Stock, and Home, Minneapolis, Minn: Our paper has ever since its founding, nearly twenty-two years ago, been consistently and continually opposed to the Government seed distribution.

Kansas Farmer, Topeka, Kans.: The free-seed graft amounts to the aggregate to an enormous raid on the Treasury. It is a perversion of the useful original purpose of aiding in the introduction and distribution of new varieties of cultivated plants. How any honorable man can support its continuance is hard to understand.

Kimball's Dairy Farmer, Waterloo, Iowa: With reference to the free-seed proposition, we are mighty glad to write as strong an article as we are able on this question.

The Strawberry, Three Rivers, Mich.: We trust that the vigor with which this work is being prosecuted may result in permanently eliminating this unjustifiable expenditure.

Oklahoma Farmer, Guthrie, Okla.: We consider this an outrage on both seed producers and sellers, and a scheme which does the farmers but little good.

National Stockman and Farmer, Pittsburg, Pa.: We are very much opposed to the perpetuation of the free-seed evil.

North Pacific Rural Spirit, Portland, Oreg.: An unjust practice of the Government.

The North Dakota Farmer, Lisbon, N. Dak.: We have always contended that th

The Dairy Record, St. Paul, Minn.: You may count on us for whatever little we can do in this matter, as we are in hearty sympathy with those who want it abolished.

New York Produce Review, New York City: We have opposed this matter for years editorially, and are pleased to add another shot.

The Elgin Dairy Report. Elgin, Ill.: We have your favor regarding the seed business and have already communicated with our Congressmen in regard to the same.

Southern Ruralist Company, Atlanta, Ga.: We have already taken this matter up with our Representatives in Congress, and shall have something to say about it editorially.

The Practical Farmer, Philadelphia: I have written to Senator Procron protesting against the insulting and utterly unwarranted insinuations of the friends of the free-seed graft in the House, and gave him some information as to the ways the seeds are handled in the South.

South.

Rural Spirit, Portland, Oreg.: We are mailing Senator Proctor a copy of our paper in which one of our editorials expresses our views pretty fully regarding free-seed distribution. Trust that this will aid somewhat toward the desired end.

The Florists' Review, Chicago, Ill.: We shall be glad to have you advise us as to the date of the hearing on free seeds before the Senate Committee on Agriculture. We shall endeavor to be represented. Southern Agriculturist and Home, Nashville, Tenn.: We have already written letters on the free-seed question to our Representatives in Washington, but at your suggestion we are writing Senator Proctor. The Ohio Farmer, Cleveland, Ohio: We have written to Senator Redieted Proctor.

I also beg the indulgence of the committee to introduce some extracts from letters from the daily newspapers; not editorials, but letters, showing the editors are personally interested. They are as follows:

LETTERS FROM DAILY NEWSPAPERS.

The Gazette-Chronicle, Augusta, Ga.: We will take pleasure in giving editorial attention to this matter and in doing what we can with our own Representatives in Congress.

Denison (Tex.) Herald: The Herald has already taken up this matter in opposition to the free distribution of seed by the Government and has had considerable to say about it one way and another. Wheeling (W. Va.) Intelligencer: We have written the Members of Congress from this district urging the same view that you take.

Waco (Tex.) Times-Herald: We have always been opposed to it, and for several years we have been condemning it in our editorial department.

Daily Messenger, Washington, N. C.: Favor using seed appropriation only for purchase and distribution of rare and valuable seeds.

The News and Herald, Winnsboro, N. C.: This money should be spent only for new seeds to send out for the purpose of experimenting.

The Asheville (N. C.) Citizen: Opposed to the promiscuous distribution of common seeds.

Appalachian, Bryson, N. C.: Condemn distribution of common seeds.

Cherokee News, Gaffney, S. C.: Opposed to seed graft. Favor discriminate distribution experiment stations.

Clinton (S. C.) Chronicle: We regard the free distribution of cheap seeds as nothing better than a species of graft.

The Lantern, Chester S. C.: The appropriation for distribution of common seeds is pure waste.

The Covington (Tenn.) Leader: We have never seen any practical results from the Government's indiscriminate distribution of seed. Is a useless waste of public money.

Commercial, Collins, Miss.: We are strictly in favor of abolishing this expensive and foolish custom.

The Calhoun Monitor, Pittsboro, Miss.: Am unalterably opposed to the free distribution of seeds in the manner in which it is now conducted.

Darlington (S. C.) News: Am opposed to distributing seeds at random over country, but favor money being given to Secretary of Agriculture to secure new and valuable seeds for experiment stations.

Fort Worth (Tex.) Record: The Record has repeatedly declared itself opposed to this iniquity.

Fairfax (S. C.) Enterprise: Am in favor of the Government appropriation being used in the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds only.

News and Sun, Griffin, Ga.: Do not favor indiscriminate distribution of cheap seeds, but do think it very proper that new or rare seeds should be thus sent out for fair tests in different parts of the country. The Ledger and Grit and Steel, Gaffney, S. C.: Am opposed to the distribution of seeds as has been carried on in recent years.

Hickory Flat (Miss.) Banner: Am in favor of stopping distribution of garden seeds.
The News, Jackson, Miss.: The News is much opposed to free seed distribution as an unnecessary expense and a paternalistic practice which should be stopped.
The Batesburg (S. C.) Advocate: The free distribution of seeds should not be tolerated.
Lexington (Ky.) Leader: The free garden seed distribution seems to us to be contrary to our governmental traditions and a subversion of the original purpose for which the seed appropriation was intended. It looks to us like a waste of money.

humbug.

Sanford (N. C.) Express: The seeds are worthless and the farmers know it. Cut out the common garden seeds, as the Senate proposes, and let the Secretary of Agriculture use the funds for making experiments and developing new seeds.

The Record, Rock Hill, S. C.: Am opposed to the distribution of common garden seeds. It is a waste of money, which should go toward strengthening the efforts of the Secretary of Agriculture in propagating new and valuable seeds.

The People, Camden, S. C.: I am opposed to the proposition mentioned as now before the Senate committee referring to the free distribution of seed.

The Prentiss Plaindealer, Booneville, Miss.: So far as I am indi-bution of seed.

The Prentiss Plaindealer, Booneville, Miss.: So far as I am individually concerned I have for years known that the practice of sending out seeds was a farce and of no practical benefit, except as a means of reminding us that we had a Congressman, which, if it were not for the annual seed distribution, we probably would overlook.

The Sterling (Kans.) Bulletin: The newspapers of Kansas regard the distribution of garden seeds by Congressmen as a joke. The appropriation devoted to improving plants would really bring some benefit to the agriculturists of the country.

The Spencer (Iowa) Herald: Government seed distribution is a wrong idea, and should be stopped. There is nothing that can be said in favor of it as now conducted.

Sioux City (Iowa) Courier: We have always been opposed to the free distribution of the seeds in question. The present system is an outrage and nothing but a nuisance.

The Every Other Daily Union, Belle Plaine, Iowa: I can not too emphatically state that I think the practice is an abuse which is run into the ground. The distribution of rare and valuable seeds is an entirely different matter, and, as I understand the law, it was the distribution of such seeds only that was originally contemplated.

The Winfield (Kans.) Weekly Tribune: I regard the free-seed distribution the most ridiculous of the many absurd propositions this Government is tied to. It ought to be abolished.

The Winterset (Iowa) Madisonian: I think the cost of the distribution is more than the value of the service rendered and that the money could be more wisely expended in other channels.

Rockwell City (Iowa) Advocate: The free distribution of garden seeds is a useless expense.

The Atlantic (Iowa) Messenger: The plan to send rare and valuable seeds to experiment stations is a good one, but the old free-seed graft should be retired.

Clinton (Iowa) Daily Advertiser: The work of the Department should be confined to introducing new varieties of vegetables and other products.

Clinton (Iowa) Daily Advertiser: The work of the Department should be confined to introducing new varieties of vegetables and ofther products.

The Semlweekly Gazette, Cedar Falls, Iowa: I believe it a neseless waste of money to distribute the kinds of seeds now being distributed. It accomplishes no good purpose and is becoming a huge joke throughout the country. The seeds are very ordinary as to class and inferior as to quality.

The Mail and Times, Des Moines, Iowa: Favor the use of the seed money for the purchase and distribution of rare and valuable seeds only. I hope this sensible change may be brought about.

The Denison (Iowa) Bulletin: The present distribution of garden seeds by the Government is considered a farce by nine out of every ten people who think about it at all. And nearly the same proportion of people believe that the purchase of tons of indescribably poor and mixed-up seeds every year is a waste and a graft which ought to be exposed.

The Advocate, Eldorado, Kans.: I never could see the sense in the distribution of common garden seeds as conducted in the past.

Encampment (Wyo.) Herald: Consider seed distribution foolish waste of money as now conducted.

The Duluth (Minn.) Evening Herald: This has been a hobby with the Evening Herald for some time past, and a great many articles and editorials have appeared in its columns denouncing this graft. This abuse has been carried on so long a time that people have lost sight of this extravagant nuisance. I sincerely trust the present Congress will abolish the custom.

abuse has been carried on so long a time that people have lost sight of this extravagant nuisance. I sincerely trust the present Congress will abolish the custom.

Iowa-Posten, Des Moines, Iowa? I have always looked at this free-seed distribution by the Government as a puerlie undertaking which can exist only because the farmers in Congress are in a hopeless minority. A practical, intelligent farmer could never sanction such waste of money to no purpose.

Daily Capital, Jamestown, N. Dak.: We are opposed to the old method of distribution of rare and valuable seeds only, when carried on along the lines of work conducted by State experiment stations. The work of the single experiment station in North Dakota has saved the farmers millions of dollars.

The Daily Eagle-Star, Marinette, Wis.: We have published considerable matter in opposition to this free-seed distribution.

Journal, Lansing, Iowa: Free distribution of garden seeds should be discontinued by the Government.

The Republican, Lincoln, Kans.: I believe the free distribution of common garden seeds to be the most foolish, useless, and defenseless method of dissipating the public funds that exists in the American Congress at the present time. I am heartly in favor of the purchase and distribution of rare and valuable seeds. This has resulted in great good to western Kansas by the introduction of several new forage crops during the past fifteen years, and, I think, is a valuable investment of public funds.

The Journal, North Freedom, Wis.: I didn't think Congress could be inveigled into any such political fraud as the seed question, with the evils of the distribution of seed.

Newton (Iowa) Journal: I consider the distribution of any rare or valuable seeds, which may be imported or originated through the Agricultural Department, is something which we believe ought not to be disturbed, but the general free distribution, through Members of Congress, of peas, beans, corn, squash, and similar seeds we believe a great evil.

The Minneapolis (Minn.) Dally News:

Congress, of peas, beans, corn, squash, and similar seeds we believe a great evil.

The Minneapolis (Minn.) Dally News: I am certainly opposed to free seed distribution, and must say most emphatically my opposition is not due to any advertising influence. Distribution of rare or valuable seeds should be continued. The sending of bushels of common grain seeds through the mail should be stopped.

The McGregor (Iowa) News: We are in favor of the distribution of rare and valuable seeds only, instead of the present methods.

The Pratt (Kans.) Union: I am heartily opposed to the foolish free distribution of common garden seeds. I use my columns constantly in opposition to all such waste of funds. Choice seeds would do good.

The Republican Register, Washington, Kans.: The garden-seed graft has had its day. The free distribution of seeds, as it has been practiced in the past, doesn't benefit anybody on earth. The farmer doesn't want the seeds, and he frequently finds that if he does sow them they are no good.

the seeds, and he frequently finds that if he does sow them they are no good.

The Democrat, Akron, Ohio: We are in thorough sympathy with your statement in this regard and trust you will be successful in abating the nuisance.

The Bay City (Mich.) Tribune: We have already had several editorials condemning the free-seed distribution.

The Crawfordsville (Ind.) Journal: We are glad to state that we are in perfect accord with your views on the subject of free-seed graft, and that we have been hammering away against it for some time.

The Dayton (Ohio) Journal: The distribution of new, rare, and valuable seeds is something that the Government ought to do more in than it is doing, but when it comes to the distribution of the seeds of common products the proposition is absurd. The expenditures for seeds have been made without due consideration for results.

The Detroit (Mich.) Journal: The Journal has been pounding on the free-seed graft for years back.

The Daily News, Dayton, Ohio: This is a practice which has been much abused, and has really resulted in no material benefit to the people. The Joliet (III.) Daily News: Our people here are opposed to the free-seed distribution on general principles.

The Morning News, Muskegon, Mich.: The promiscuous distribution of seeds is a useless expense, and brings no adequate returns to the Goyennment or the people.

The Philadelphia (Pa.) Inquirer: We beg to inclose you editorial in reference to "No more free seeds."

The Pittsburg (Pa.) Gazette: Several years ago the Gazette took this matter up, but did not seem to make any great progress toward a settlement. However I trust you will be more successful.

Pittsburg (Pa.) Chronicle-Telegraph: Our editorial writer, Mr. Simpson, will have something to say regarding the "free-seed distribution legislation," as he entirely agrees with your favor in regard to the matter.

Pittsburg (Pa.) Chronicle-Telegraph: Our editorial writer, Mr. Simpson, will have something to say regarding the "free-seed distribution legislation," as he entirely agrees with your favor in regard to the matter.

The Utica (N. Y.) Press: We have had several editorials on this subject. We shall be glad to keep the matter up, and think it is in the best interest of all to have that appropriation done away with.

The Patriot, Concord, N. H.: Neither as an editor nor as a citizen do I believe in the governmental free distribution of common garden seeds or of any other kinds of seeds. The whole thing should be summarily dispensed with and disposed of.

Hampshire Gazette, Northampton, Mass.: We believe it inexpedient for the Government to distribute seeds as it has done for years.

Beverly (Mass.) Evening Times: We are in full sympathy.

The Lancaster (N. H.) Gazette: Among practical gardeners there has never been any attempt to use the seeds that have been so promiscously sent out. By all means cut out the squash and pumpkins, and if the appropriation is to be continued let us have the rare and valuable seeds distributed to the different experiment stations.

The Newburyport (Mass.) Dally News: We have used about all of your matter on the seed question, considering it timely and exactly meeting our views upon the question.

Plymouth (N. H.) Record: The free-seed distribution as carried out now is not doing the good intended, and the seeds as sent out now are principally good for chicken feed.

The Syracuse (N. Y.) Post-Standard: We deem the annual appropriation ridiculous, and have pleasure in cooperating for the defeat and permanent discontinuance of this old-time abuse.

Providence (R. I.) Journal and Evening Bulletin: The Providence Journal and the Evening Bulletin have for years contended against the wasteful use of money for free-seed distribution. We have printed countless editorials on the matter and shall continue to do so until the practice is abandoned.

Terre Haute (Ind.) Morning Star: I have taken the

The Christian Union, Des Moines, Iowa: By all means let us have the new and valuable seeds, rather than pumpkins and parsnips.

Scottish Chief, Moxton, N. C.: I think some plan ought to be arrived at of distributing a better class of seed. The distribution of poor seeds brings the Agricultural Department into disrepute.

Confederate Veteran, Nashville, Tenn.: I agree with you that there should be a radical change in the practice of sending out seeds by the Government, and only the rare and valuable kinds sent out.

White Ribbon Bulletin, Fargo, N. Dak.: I regard the free distribution of garden seeds as an unnecessary expenditure of public money.

A. O. U. W. (Ancient Order United Workmen) Messenger, Nashville, Tenn.: The wholesale giving away of cheap and worthless seeds is a very unnecessary expense and should be stopped.

Textile Excelsior, Charlotte, N. C.: I am opposed to the practice, first, last, and all the time.

National Printing Company, proprietors Bohemian-American Newspaper Union, Omaha, Nebr.: It has been our policy from way back to denounce the fake seed distribution. Many times we have pointed out the uselessness of the same and the constant waste.

Spirit of the West, Des Moines, Iowa: Spirit of the West is entirely willing to cut out the free distribution of pumpkin and squash seed and turn the appropriation over to Secretary Wilson to do the rest.

The Southern Lumberman, Nashville, Tenn.: From what we do know of it, are opposed to the custom.

Southern Christian Advocate, Spartanburg, S. C.: I am absolutely opposed to the free distribution by the Government of seeds, in most cases absolutely worthless.

RESOLUTIONS NATIONAL GRANGE, PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY, REPRESENTING 800,000 FARMERS, ADOPTED AT DENVER, COLO., NOVEMBER, 1906.

Whereas Congress annually appropriates $242,000 for the purchase of field, flower, and garden seeds, most of which are of a common va-or held, hower, and garden seeds, most or which are of a common variety; and Whereas the Department of Agriculture, at Washington, expends as much more in their distribution, making, in round numbers, a half million dollars; and be it **Resolved*, That we reaffirm and readopt the resolution unanimously adopted by the National Grange at its session held at Portland, Oreg., in November, 1904, which is as follows: "We are unanimous in the conclusion that while the Agricultural Department, at Washington, should exert due diligence in its research for new food, forage, and other plants, and while there is something that can and perhaps should be done through the exchange of seeds, we can not conclude otherwise than that the general and free distribution of the many kinds and varieties of garden and field seeds by the Department is without benefit in any important sense and should be abandoned.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE JOINT CONVENTION OF THE FARMERS' IN-STITUTE AND KENTUCKY STATE GRANGE, AT LEXINGTON, KY., OCTOBER 24, 1906.

Whereas the distribution of common garden seeds by the United States Department of Agriculture has become a misuse of public funds;

Whereas the distribution of common garden seeds by the United States Department of Agriculture has become a misuse of public funds; and Whereas the farmers of this country derive comparatively no benefit from it, and we believe that the money could be more wisely expended: Therefore, be it Resolved, 1. That we are opposed to the Congressional free distribution of seeds as now conducted.

2. That we heartily indorse the action of the Agricultural Committee of the House in omitting from the agricultural appropriation bill the amount annually expended for this purpose.

3. That we appeal to the President of the United States and our Senators and Representatives in Congress to oppose this appropriation in the future and to devote the amount now annually appropriated toward the upbuilding of our agricultural colleges and experimental stations, the development of important crops, and the advancement in education pertaining to agriculture.

The South Texas Fruit and Truck Growers' Association, consisting of affiliated local associations throughout south Texas and the Gulf coast country, the total membership of which is over 1,300, passed unanimously the following resolutions during their regular meeting at Edna, November 13 and 14:

"Whereas the free garden seed received from Members of Congress at the expense of the General Government are usually of varieties known to be unsuited to the soil and climate of south Texas, and hence are worthless to us; and

"Whereas the expense to the General Government of obtaining seed and distributing them is a considerable item, and a serious economic waste wholly unjustified by the results obtained; and

"Whereas the expense to the General Government of obtaining seed and distribution given is a considerable item, and a serious economic waste wholly unjustified by the results obtained; and

"Whereas the expense to the General Government of obtaining seed and distribution of which would be of lasting value to every vegetable grower and to the whole State: Therefore be it

Maine State Grange, O. Gardner, master: I am in full sympathy with you in regard to the free-seed-distribution humbug and will assist in every way in stopping the confounded nuisance.

Minnesota State Grange, S. G. Baird, master: Will be glad to do anything to help the good work along.

Also a few selected opinions of individuals, which will be of interest: Harvie Jordan, president Southern Cotton Association: I will use the subject-matter as a basis for an editorial in the Cotton Journal at some time in the near future.

J. Harvey Whiteman, attorney, Wilmington, Del.: I take pleasure in adding my support to the movement that has been inaugurated looking toward the appropriation of funds, which have hitherto been applied to the distribution of seeds, to the Department of Agriculture in the various agricultural colleges.

Charles A. McClure, Walthall, Miss.: In reference to free distribution of seeds I will say that it is condemned by the farmers and people of this section. I think that the distribution of rare and valuable seeds would be universally favored.

James H. Jackson, M. D., the Jackson Sanatorium, Dansville, N. Y.: I heartily approve of your fight.

C. Watt Brandon, Pinedale, Wyo.: I would most certainly be in favor of rare and valuable seeds and seeds adapted to the various altitudes. Many of the seeds now sent to this high altitude, 7,169 feet, are seldom planted.

C. W. Eichling, manager Avenue Floral Company, New Orleans, La.: I shall not fail to bring the matter before the four horticultural societies we have in the South. I can assure you in advance of their hearty cooperation.

B. F. Smith, fruit and plant grower, Lawrence, Kans.: I was on the committee on resolutions at the August meeting of our county horticultural society. Our society was about unanimous in vote against free distribution of free seed.

W. A. Wickham, Tipton, Iowa: In regard to the Congressional freeseed distribution I will say that I am, and always have been, unalterably opposed to it.

C. M. Gallup, Brooklyn, Conn.: I am a farmer. I have never heard a

C. M. Gallup, Brooklyn, Conn.: I am a farmer. I have never heard a farmer say a word favorable to the free-seed distribution, and I live in a section purely agricultural.

C. D. Tuener, Hillsboro, N. C.: We have great confidence in the integrity and ability of Secretary Wilson and his associates. Therefore we would say give him all power consistent with reason to manage the affairs of his Department in such manner as he deems best.

Mason Snowden, Wilkinson County Cotton Association, Woodville, Miss.: In regard to doing away with the free-seed distribution, will say that I am in favor of its annulment.

George P. Hardwick, secretary Farmers' Industrial Union, Britt, Iowa: I have nothing to offer favoring the free distribution of property, whether it be seeds or otherwise.

Colon C. Lillie, president Michigan State Dairy Association: I am heartily in sympathy with your efforts in this matter.

J. R. Simonton, Yarmouth (Mass.) Grange: I have always thought it amounted to nothing and should be stopped.

J. J. Haynie, editor Waynesboro (Miss.) News-Beacon: It would seem to us that this arrangement would be of incalculable benefit.

J. W. Berry, president board of regents Kansas State Agricultural College: I am sure there is not a farmer in this county that would defend it or even apologize for it. Mr. Breed, who represented this county at the farmers' meeting at Rock Island, Ill., says all the farmers at that congress consider this Government distribution a farce. You can count on my active support.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ZENOR].

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] for his courtesy.

I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to discuss generally the provisions in this bill. I confess I am not very familiar with the bill, as I have not examined it very carefully, but I desire to emphasize my objection to that particular portion of it to which attention has been called, and which has occupied the time up to this point in the discussions before the committee.

Mr. Chairman, this measure affects in a large measure about twenty billions of the wealth of this nation invested in farms and farming property, and it affects more or less about 5,737,372 farmers. The total value of the entire products of the farms of the United States, as given by the census of 1890, amounts to $4,739,118,552. As a matter of course not all the farms are operated by their owners, but the number of farms measure the number of farmers in the United States.

According to the census there are 5,737,372 farmers. tal value of the products is as I have suggested. I represent in part, I think, one of the greatest States in this Union. At any rate, Mr. Chairman, it is the peer of any other State in this Union as an agricultural State [applause]—a State that embraces an area of 36,000 square miles, containing, according to the ratio of population and farms as given by the census, about 400,000 farmers. The total value, as shown by the census in 1890, of the products of the farms of Indiana was $204,450,196. According to the same authority there was paid out by the farmers of Indiana in the year 1899 for labor employed upon the farms $9,685,540, and paid out for fertilizers $1,553,710, making a total expenditure in the operation of the farms of Indiana $1:,239,250. According to the census of 1890 there were at that $11,239,250. According to the census of 1890 there were at that time 10,272,000 and upward of farmers in the United States. This bill carries an appropriation for the agricultural interests of this great country, representing about one-fifth of our total national wealth, the small and comparatively insignificant sum of $7,635,790-about one-thirtieth part of 1 per cent of the aggregate annual appropriations for the ordinary operating expenses of the Government, less than 3 per cent of the amount carried in the annual naval budget, and not to exceed 21 per cent of our annual Army supply.

I have said that this measure to a certain extent affects the entire farming interests of this country. I have listened with a good deal of interest to the discussion of this particular feature of the bill, and I think that the proposed change made in this bill is an unwise policy to inaugurate at this time. I think this an unwise change to make and that the public seed distribution should be continued as now provided by law. This policy was immediately adopted upon the establishment of the Agricultural Bureau in 1862, and with but a slight modification made by the act of July 25, 1866, has ever since been followed. act only changed the language in reference to the character and quality of the seed to be purchased and distributed. By the last act these seeds were to be "rare and uncommon," whereas in the original act they were "new and valuable seeds." In that act—that is, the original act of 1862—it was provided that the distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants." Subsequent to that time there was a change made with reference to the purchase and distribution of seed. The act of 1866, July 23, now embraced in the Revised Statutes as section

Secretary of Agriculture should purchase certain seeds—to use the exact language of that part of the statute, "to purchase and 527, has this language:

The purchase and distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture shall be confined to such seed as are rare and uncommon to the country or such as can be made more profitable by frequent changes from one part of our country to another; and the purchase or propagation and distribution of trees, plants, shrubs, vines, and cuttings shall be confined to such as are adapted to general cultivation and to promote the general interests of horticulture and agriculture throughout the United States.

Now, the gentleman from Kansas suggests that there were no changes made in reference to this law. But it is apparent, Mr. Chairman, that for some reasons that occurred to the Agricultural Department it was necessary to make a change in the manner in which the seeds were purchased by the Government. So Congress authorized the Secretary to phrchase these same kind of seeds, "rare and uncommon," and this statute provides it may be done either from our own people here or from foreign countries. The advocates of this change claim that there is no special change in the general provision of the law, nor will there be in the administration, except as to the manner and method of the distribution.

Mr. Chairman, I listened as well as I could to the gentleman from Kansas, and he says that he predicates his objection to the law as it now stands, and as it has stood for these many years, upon the ground that it is a violation of the fundamental principles of our Government. A violation, says he, of the fundamental principles of our Government. He does not believe that the Government ought to engage in the business of buying seed for the farmers to any extent or for any purpose and assume the burden of their free distribution among the farmers. That this is a business that does not belong to the Government.

Mr. Chairman, since I have been a Member of this House there have been a great many measures that have led to a great diversity of opinion among the Members of this House as to their wisdom or policy, and many laws that have been enacted have created a division of sentiment as to whether they were not partial in their objects and purposes—a species of favoritism, and operated for the especial benefit of some as against the interests of others,

I listened with a great deal of interest to a discussion which took place on a bill introduced by my colleague from Indiana [Mr. Crumpacker] but a few days since, and which I gladly supported and voted for, to control the exercise of the discretion and provide for a review of the decision of one of the heads of the Departments here at Washington. In the Post-Office Department the Postmaster-General became substantially an autocrat in determining what character of mail should go through the public mails, and through his decision cutting off, proscribing, and forbidding carrying certain matter through the mail. This bill, introduced by my colleague and passed by this House authorizing a review of that decision, a decision that was to all intents and purposes final, no matter what interests it involved or who it may have affected, and unless this bill shall become a law this arbitrary power will remain and continue to be exercised by this Department of the Government. Mr. Chairman, the proposition contained in this bill to withdraw from the Members of Congress the distribution of these seeds and vest the power in the Agricultural Department is virtually creating the same condition in the Agricultural Department as to seeds, only in a different form, to that which we are trying to destroy in the Post-Office Department.

This provision in this bill proposes to turn over and vest in the discretion and power of the Secretary of the Agricultural Department the complete control of the seed distribution, and confines the same to those only who will establish experiment stations, and not to the farmers, as heretofore. The effect of this will be to create a corps of new officers-experts and scientists-here in Washington, at a large expense. It proposes to appropriate $238,000. It proposes to create a bureau here and rent rooms at an annual cost of $3,000, and the Lord only knows what additional cost will ensue to equip this new branch of the public service. Why not let this money go into the purchase of seed for distribution among the farmers of this country, instead of creating a coterie of Federal officers here for the purpose of experimenting with the seed that they say the Government shall purchase? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ZENOR. Will the gentleman allow me ten minutes more? The gentleman from Indiana asks unani-The CHAIRMAN. mous consent to continue his remarks for ten minutes. Is there

There was no objection.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have leave to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Permission has already been granted for

Mr. ZENOR. If the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scott] is so scrupulous about this being a violation of fundamental principles of our Government, if he thinks it is the pursuance of an unwise policy, I ask him how he stands on the proposition of a ship subsidy, which proposes to take out of the Federal Treasury of this country a large sum of money—over $3,750,000 annually-and donate it to special interests under the pretense of increasing and building up the merchant marine of this country? That proposition seems now to be pressing and will, in all probability, in a few days be presented for the action of this House. Only yesterday Members listened to a message from the President of the United States advocating it.

I want to know if the gentleman can discriminate between that kind of favoritism, that kind of bounty, that kind of appropriations, and reconcile his conscientious scruples with the support of that measure while insisting that he and those sharing his views feel constrained to oppose the present law authorizing the free distribution of seeds to the farmers of the No, Mr. Chairman, it seems that the tendency of legislation in recent years to favor the already wealthy and influential, and not only to concentrate all wealth in the hands of the few, but likewise all power in some department of this Government or some bureau in the city of Washington, until we are rapidly becoming a Government of bureaus and departments, instead of a representative Government by the people. For years this policy of free-seed distribution among the farmers throughout the country, this slight aid in improving the quality and character of farm seeds and grain, has been carried on through the Members of Congress. These seeds, through the very excellent administration of Secretary Wilson. of the Agricultural Department, have come to be of a very high grade, and much sought and appreciated by the farmers as a rule, and they will feel that this change, this withdrawal from them of this small pittance, is as ungracious as it is unjustifiable under all the circumstances. They will be apt to compare this effort to economize and reform with the action of this House but a few days since in reference to the salaries of its Members and the various heads of the Departments and members of the Cabinet.

I have before me the act of June 30, 1906, the last appropriation act, wherein it is made mandatory upon the Secretary of Agriculture to equally distribute the amount of seeds which are purchased for distribution among the Members of Congress, and it is also made mandatory upon Members of Congress to distribute those seeds to the people of their districts, and there is also a requirement that, upon being so requested by the Secretary, the Members of Congress shall make a request of the farmers to whom the seed is sent to make report of the results to the Agricultural Department. Whether this may be construed as mandatory or permissive, it matters not. No complaint has ever been made that the distribution of those seeds is not properly made by the Members of the House. Yet it is proposed to with-draw this little benefit that goes to the farmers under the pretense that it is a useless extravagance and does them no good. I do not pretend to say, Mr. Chairman, that I reflect the universal sentiment of my district. There are some persons who be-lieve there is no great benefit derived by the farmers from the free distribution of seeds, but I undertake to say that the great bulk, the great majority of the people of the district, and I believe of the State of Indiana, indorse the free distribution of seeds.

Is there any benefit? Go and ask the farmer who has been receiving these seeds and get his reply to that question. will find that out of every ten six or eight will give you an affirmative answer. This practice and policy has been going on since 1806 up to the present hour, and it is very difficult for anyone to estimate the exact benefit derived by the farmers. How are you to get at it by a mathematical calculation what benefit is derived by the farmers by the distribution of these public seeds? It is difficult to do it, but the farmers themselves understand the proposition.

Mr. Chairman, it was replied by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Candler], who is a distinguished member of the committee, who heard all the evidence before that committee, in answer to a question propounded by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. James], that there was a certain class of individuals who had been exploiting public sentiment, who had been attempting to create public sentiment in favor of the repeal of this law and in favor of the destruction of this free distribution of seeds.

It was in evidence before that committee, as stated by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Candler], that certain parties in-terested in the sale of seeds—certain retail dealers, certain jobbers-had been able to come here and organize a strong lobby or concerted effort to make a protest against the further continuance of this free-seed proposition and in favor of a change in the law. No farmers are represented here by a lobby. are unable to gather about these Halls and committee rooms to protect their interests when threatened by the combined assaults of sordid interests. I have a great contempt for a lobby of any kind. I am not, however, disposed to criticise the right any man or of any interest to be heard before a committee of this House or any committee of Congress, for I believe in the right of every man and every interest to be so heard, whether through the instrumentality of a properly accredited representa-tive or through the party directly interested; but I do think that where a lobby is organized and comes before a committee, actuated by a sordid and selfish motive, and favors the repeal of a law in their own personal interest and for their own personal benefit, especially where the law sought to be changed or repealed is one solely in the interest of the farmers, that that lobby should be open to criticism, and what they say ought to be taken with a great deal of allowance.

For, as a rule, lobbies are seldom formed and rarely ever occupied in the promotion of legitimate legislation, and are still less frequently actuated by pure and patriotic motives. This free-seed distribution, I confess, seriously in some instances interferes with the profits of these men who are engaged in the sale of seeds. We all understand that the men engaged in this business have always protested against this free distribution of seeds by the Government. It has been suggested that the same amount of seed purchased and distributed by the Government for $242,000 last year would have cost the farmers, if they had purchased same at retail prices from private dealers, the sum of $2,000,000. Therefore you can see the margin of profit in this business to the seed dealers of the country. these gentlemen succeed in changing or altering the policy of this Government and destroy the distribution of these seeds, gentlemen can see the great profit that they expect to make But that is not the serious objection, in my judgment, to this proposition of changing this policy of the Government.

I am opposed to it because it is not a matter of economy and it does not lighten the burdens of the Government. to appropriate $238,000 to purchase the same kind of seeds and then place the distribution of these seeds under the control of a bureau in the city of Washington. What for? For the benefit of the agricultural interests, for the benefit of the farmer, to develop the agriculture of the country? No. But for a few scientists and experts who may experiment through the Agricultural Department at the cost of $238,000 annually, the same we are now paying for the free seeds, with a view of possibly discovering some method of improving the quality of a few seed, without any provision by which the farmer can be bene-Where are the experimental places to be estabfited by it. lished? Where? Are they to go to your own district? there is no provision for that in this bill; it is in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, and I want now to take this opportunity and occasion to pay the Secretary of Agriculture my humble compliment by saying that I believe that I reflect the universal opinion of the farmers in this country, especially of my own district and State, when I say that the Secretary of Agriculture is a man eminently fitted and worthy of the position that he holds, and the peer of any man, in my judgment, who has ever administered the affairs of that Department.

I might say the same of Doctor Galloway. But these men seem to have indorsed a change of policy. Where are the benefits of this change to go? Is it of advantage to the Government? It does not go to the farmers. How are you going to improve the quality of the seeds sent out? In what manner? By what method? Is the farmer of this country to derive any benefit from it? Why do you want to experiment to improve the quality of seeds in the country if it does not redound to the benefit of the farmers of this country? How are you going to get the benefits to them? There is no provision in this bill Is it simply for the purpose of gratifying the curiosity and demonstrating the skill of these expert scientists that may be selected to investigate and inquire into the improvement and quality of the seeds of this country. I do not believe it is a proper policy.

Sir, as I have already suggested, I shall not be astonished if the constituents of some of the Members of this Congress will not challenge their attention to the fact that this spasmodic effort to inaugurate reforms could have been accomplished with far better grace by letting their salaries remain where they have had the approval of many years, and have always been sufficient to induce worthy and distinguished statesmen to seek their suffrages to represent them in this the greatest legislative body in the world, and permit them to enjoy the small favor of a few high-grade Government seeds. They may be They may be reminded by some of their farmer constituents that they are unable to appreciate the disinterested statesmanship that would move this body to increase the pay of its Members 50 per cent, or about $1,300,000 annually, and at the same time, under the prefense of economy, retrenchment, and reform, abolish the free-seed distribution to the producers, who have these in-creased burdens to meet out of the proceeds of their sweat and

Sir, I do not believe it is a wise change, and I am therefore opposed to the provision as it stands in this bill and shall vote to support the amendment to be later on offered by the gentleman from Mississippi. [Applause.]
Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Foster of Vermont, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24815, the agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 190. Joint resolution extending protection of second proviso of section 1 of the act of December 21, 1904, to certain entrymen:

H. R. 23561. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River between Walla Walla and Benton counties, in the State of Washington, by the North Coast Railroad Company ;

H. R. 23560. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River between Benton and Franklin counties, in the State of Washington, by the North Coast Railroad Company:

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 23114. An act extending to the subport of Bellingham, in the State of Washington, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement;

H. R. 24048. An act authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Fort Wright Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Spokane and Inland Empire Railroad Company, its successors and assigns :

H. R. 15769. An act granting an increase of pension to William

W. Bennett; and

H. R. 3980. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank G. Hammond.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

He also presented a petition of the Business Men's Association of New Britain, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a reclassification and increase in the salaries of postal clerks in all first and second class post-offices; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 7840) granting an increase of pension to Lewis A.

Towne; and

A bill (H. R. 13884) granting a pension to Helen Augusta Mason Boynton.

SARAH A. CLAPP.

Mr. GEARIN. On yesterday I reported from the Committee on Claims the bill (H. R. 1738) for the relief of Sarah A. Clapp. I ask leave to submit a report in connection with that bill, and that it be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a bill (S. 8126) authorizing the enlargement of military reservations by exchange of lands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DU PONT introduced a bill (S. 8127) authorizing the appointment of Lieut. Col. Frederick Fuger, United States Army, retired, on the retired list of the Army with the rank of brigadier-general; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 8128) granting to the St. Johns Light and Power Company a right of way for street railroad purposes through the United States military reservation of Fort Marion, in St. Augustine, Fla., and through other Government property in said city; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 8129) granting an increase of pension to Asa S. Hugill; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8130) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Wharton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 8131) for the relief of certain counties in the State of Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CARMACK introduced a bill (S. 8132) for the relief of J. Bloomstein, administrator of the estate of Jacob Bloomstein; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HEYBURN introduced a bill (S. 8133) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the transfer of forest reserves from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture," approved February 1, 1905; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PETTUS (for Mr. Morgan) introduced a bill (S. 8134) for the relief of the heirs of Andrew J. Brazelton, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PETTUS introduced a bill (S. 8135) to authorize the Mobile Railway and Dock Company to dredge a channel from the 30-foot curve on the west side of the deep water in Mobile Bay into Dauphin Island Bay through Pass Drury; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. TALIAFERRO submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the experiments in the orange-growing States for the eradication of the pest known as the "white fly," intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $75,000 for the purchase and improvement of playgrounds sites in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment relative to the salaries of consular clerks, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yesterday there were about twenty-five of the pension bills which were not prepared. They were reported yesterday, but did not reach the clerks at the desk in time to be considered. I ask unanimous consent for their passage this

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator wait until the morning business is closed.

Mr. McCUMBER. If that be the desire, I will do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from North Dakota for that purpose later.

COAL-LAND ENTRIES IN ALASKA.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

There is a resolution which came over from yes-Mr. HALE. terday, which I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. I wish the Senator would allow me just a moment before that is taken up. I desire to call attention to the bill (H. R. 17415) to authorize the assignees of coal-land locations to make entry under the coal-land laws applicable to Alaska. It was passed at the last session, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooners] entered a motion to reconsider the bill. I ask unanimous consent that the motion to reconsider may be adopted, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands. I understand that that course is satisfactory to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I doubt if it will be necessary to recommit the bill unless the Senator desires it. I am quite willing to have the motion disposed of on Monday.

Mr. NELSON. I ask to have the motion considered and the bill recommitted. I think that is what the Senator wants.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I am not sure but that I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion.

Mr. NELSON., To withdraw the motion to reconsider?
Mr. SPOONER. Yes. So if the Senator will let it go until Monday I think it can be arranged.

Mr. NELSON. All right.

SOLICITATION FOR LEGISLATION BY OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolution No. 231, coming over from yesterday, proposing to direct the Secretary of the Navy to investigate as to whether a certain order and regulations in regard to influencing legislation are being violated by any officer or employee of his Department.

Mr. HALE. Unless some Senator desires to have the resolution read, it need not be read again. It was read at the desk yesterday carefully, and it is quite a long resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Maine if the noted statement is the sole basis for the resolution? I read from a memorandum in the resolution which calls for the action of the Senate, and I am wondering if that is the sole offense with which these naval officers are charged.

Mr. HALE. I must say that it is hardly an offense with which these officers are charged. It is, in a way, interfering and trying to influence legislation in a manner contrary to the orders and regulations of the Department and the Presidential order. I notice that in the other House a Member of that body has called attention to such importunities and has brought out more fully circulars that have been sent to midshipmen at Annapolis, furnishing them with a form to send to their parents in order that they may send it to Congressmen.

I have no desire, I will say to the Senator, to punish anyone, but it has become apparent that here was a determination to force a bill through when it should be left to the responsibility of the House and Senate as to what course it should take in what is called the "personnel bill." It is a very important bill, and I have no doubt it will receive very careful consideration from the committees in both Houses. I am certain that it will in the Senate. It involves very grave and serious questions, and that there will be some legislation on the subject I have no

But, in common with other Senators and with other Members, I felt that just now there is a violation of this order. However other Senators may think about the order, it is existing and in I do not care to discuss it. I felt that it was proper to call the attention of the Secretary of the Navy to it; that is all. will say to the Senator from Ohio that that is the only object I have in view. However any Senator may feel about the Presidential order, I do not think, on reflection, in this situation at the end of the session he can object to our calling the attention of the Secretary to the matter.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, I have read the memorandum very carefully, and I fail to see wherein the circulation of the memorandum conflicts either with the order of the President or the regulations cited in the resolution. The memorandum, which has been circulated among midshipmen and naval officers, says:

This is the short session of Congress, and with the exception of the appropriation bills none will receive consideration that do not command the interest and support of a large proportion of the Senators and Representatives. This bill has an excellent chance of being enacted into law at this session if each officer and midshipman will promptly and effectively do his part toward obtaining the interest and support necessary to success. Each officer and midshipman knowing that the bill, if enacted into law, would tremendously add to the efficiency of the personnel, should immediately write or telegraph the Senators and Congressmen representing his State and district, giving his own reasons in his own way for urging them to consider and act on the bill at this session of Congress. Each one should also write influential friends at home and urge them to write or telegraph their Senators and Congressmen to act at this session on the Navy personnel bill transmitted to Congress in a special message by the President on December 17. Urge them to protest against any delay. Also all local newspapers should be requested to aid in the fight.

Then the resolution follows, which is-

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, directed to investigate as to whether the foregoing order and regulations have been, or are being, violated by any officer or employee of his Department and to report the result of his investigation to Congress.

The attention of the Secretary of the Navy is directed first to the order of the President, which is as follows:

All officers and employees of the United States of every description, serving in or under any of the Executive Departments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay, or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way save through the heads of the Departments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service.

I fail to see, Mr. President, where urgent action upon the personnel bill, which has been recommended in a special message by the President and recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, and which confessedly is important legislation, conflicts with this order of the President, since it can hardly be construed as legislation directly affecting their pay or in their personal interest.

So two sections of the regulations for the government of the Navy of the United States are cited. The first is article 231:

Combinations of officers for the purpose of influencing legislation, remonstrating against orders, or complaining of details of duty are forbidden; and no person shall delay obedience to an order for the purpose of making remonstrance or complaint.

Then article 232:

All petitions, remonstrances, memorials, and communications from any officer or officers of the Navy or Marine Corps, whether on the active or retired list, addressed to Congress, or to either House there-

These communications are not addressed to Congress or to either House, but to individual Members-or to any committee of Congress, on any subject of legislation relating to the Navy, pending, proposed, or suggested, shall be forwarded through the Navy Department, and not otherwise, except by authority of the Department.

It does not seem to me that the memorandum which has been submitted as evidence of such interference in any way conflicts with the order or the regulations of the Department.

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. DICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to interfere with the Senator. do not want to take up much time with this matter.

Mr. DICK. I thought the Senator wanted to ask me a ques-

Mr. HALE. The Senator will bear in mind that all that is asked in this matter, which has appealed to a good many Members and Senators, is that the Secretary shall look into it and report. If the Secretary thinks there has been no infraction of these orders, if he thinks that this is not a combination of officers, he will so report to us, and that will be the end of it.

The memorandum that the Senator refers to is only a portion. I am getting every day more details of the circulars that have been sent out. One which every midshipman has sent to his parents contains the following:

Believe me, however, I am not making a plea for the service at large. I am working to further my own ambitions of serving the United States in positions of high rank at an early age, and my reason for inclosing these papers is not to stir you up as a public-minded citizen to adjust an important factor of our national welfare, but to let you know that while furthering my own individual ends you would be doing nothing that a patriotic or thoughtful man should not do.

This thing has been gone into a great deal more elaborately than I knew at first and more elaborately than I knew yester day. I received a copy of this circular since the resolution was presented yesterday. I only wish to say to the Senator that I was careful in offering the resolution to leave it entirely with the Secretary to report to us. If he thinks there has been no infraction, he will report that there has been none, and that will be the end of it.

But I will say to the Senator that I think, after some experience, it is not a bad thing to call attention to these combinations of officials that have set up organizations, as they do bureaus, to influence Congress. The business of officers is otherwise. The business of officers of the Army and Navy is otherwise. The business of clerks and employees in all Departments is different from that. They ought not to do it. These associations boycott somebody every now and then. The association of the Post-Office Department, which is a combination just like this, boycotted certain Members and, I think, defeated certain Members. The President had that in mind. This is undoubtedly a combination for a certain purpose; but if the Secretary finds that nothing harmful has come of it, he will say so to us.

I do not want to take any more time.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask the Senator if he will not yield to me that I may have a resolution that is rather pressing laid before the Senate.

Mr. DICK. I will yield.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that the action of the House of Representatives on Senate joint resolution No. 86 may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Let us dispose of this matter first. I doubt whether, under the rules of the Senate, the Senator has a right to yield.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The rule allows the action which I have requested.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine vield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HALE. I have not the floor. The Senator from Ohio has

I wish he would not yield.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. DICK. I understand that the resolution is of a privileged character and that action on it is very important.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The resolution is of a privileged char-

EXTENSION OF TIME TO HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 86) granting an extension of time to certain homestead entrymen.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 4, after "Montana," to insert "Washington;" in line 5 to strike out "six months';" in line 6, after "to," to insert "make entry under such declaratory statement or;" in line 9, after "make," to insert "such entry or;" and in line 10, after "them," to insert "Provided, That this extension of time shall not shorten either the period of commutation or of actual residence under the homestead law: Provided further, That the provisions of joint resolution No. 81, approved January 18, 1907, shall apply to the States of Idaho and Washington."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments with an amendment to strike out of the last amendment "joint resolution No. 81" and insert "public resolution No. 4."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Is this going to take up time? It is an unusual proceeding to interpose such a matter when we are going on with business that is before the Senate. It can only by unanimous consent be brought in, and it will evidently give rise to

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that the rule relative to privileged matters may be read. It is a short rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The portion of the rule to which the Senator refers is the following subdivision of Rule VII:

5. The presiding officer may at any time lay, and it shall be in order at any time for a Senator to move to lay, before the Senate any bill or other matter sent to the Senate by the President or the House of Representatives, and any question pending at that time shall be suspended for this purpose. Any motion so made shall be determined without de-

Mr. HALE. That does not take a Senator off the floor when he is making remarks.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I asked the Senator from Ohio to yield, and he very kindly did so. I am sure I do not desire to delay the matter the Senator from Maine is interested in. I have had no idea that it would give rise to any debate. I think it will not give rise to any debate if the Senator will allow it to go on.

Mr. HALE. Suppose it does not give rise to debate, ought not the other matter to be first gotten out of the way?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. What is the status?
Mr. HALE. I yield, Mr. President.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota proposes an amendment to the last amendment of the House to the joint resolution, which will be stated.

The Secretary. In the proviso, the last amendment, strike out the word "joint," before "resolution," and insert the word "public;" and after the word "resolution" strike out "numbered eighty-one" and insert "numbered four."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment of the House.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask the Senator a question. understood the resolution as it passed the Senate it extended the time until May.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Until May 15 to entrymen-to those who have not yet made residence upon the public land.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand that the limitation is now removed and that there is no limitation at all of the extension of Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is limited to May 15.

Mr. LODGE. I could not understand it from the amendment read at the desk. It said "strike out the words 'six months,'" I do not know in what connection those words occur. I have not seen it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is a mere formality. the Senator that this resolution has had very careful considera-

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to know whether the extension is to May 15, as it passed the Senate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is precisely the same.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire some information which the Senator from North Dakota can probably give me. When the resolution recited in the bill as it comes from the House was before the Senate it did not include the State of Idaho, and it went back to the House with Idaho in it; that is, the provision extending the resolution to Idaho was included in another resolution.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. And it is in this resolution. Idaho is included in both resolutions.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was added by the House. Then this remedies a mistake in reciting the former resolution?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will point it out. The last proviso in the resolution, as I propose to amend it, reads:

Provided further, That the provisions of public resolution No. 4, approved January 18, 1907, shall apply to the States of Idaho and Wash-

So the Senator's State is included.

Mr. HEYBURN. And the change from the resolution as recited in the House bill substituting the public resolution still carries that right to the State of Idaho?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It does. Mr. HEYBURN. That is satisfactory, if it is true. Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is true.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota to the last amendment of the House.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendments as amended were concurred in.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Ohio.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio will suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the Chair will not interrupt the proceedings now going on. I am very desirous that the matter which has been up shall be concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will take but a moment. It is desired that the House bills on the table should be referred before the Senator concludes. Without objection, the Secretary will state the bills.

SOLICITATION FOR LEGISLATION BY OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HALE.

Hr. DICK. Mr. President, it is to be conceded that combinations among officers, clerks, and officials in general in military and civil pursuits may be made for harmful purposes, but I hope whether this resolution is adopted or not, and whatever the results of the investigation of the Secretary of the Navy, if he be directed to make one, that neither the Senate nor the House will construe this order or these regulations as if to bar any man in the service of the country, whether in civil or other pursuits, from communicating with his Representative and his Senators or exercising what might be termed the right of petition. I feel that Senators ought, perhaps, rather to invite than to repel the opinions and judgment of men who are in these professional capacities; and I shall be very unwilling to support a resolution which implies even that any officer serving in civil or other capacity thereby forfeits the slightest right he exercises as a free citizen in matters of legislation before Con-

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is a very wise legislator, and I generally listen to his propositions and suggestions with great respect. doubts, however, as to the propriety of this resolution. I think it is one that should be fully discussed, and one that preferably

We have before us, exhibited as a part of the resolution, an Executive order of 1902, in which all civil as well as military employees of the Government are forbidden to solicit an increase of pay or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever.

Now, let us ask ourselves the question, by the fact that a citizen assumes the clerkship of a court, or a position in the internal-revenue service, or undertakes any business for the Government connected with the public lands, or a lawyer who may be employed to represent the Government: Do these classes of persons thereby disable themselves from communicating with their Senators or Representatives in Congress and stating their own views upon any question of legislation or upon any question of compensation? Are they obliged to submit their opinion to their superior officers in the civil service and abstain utterly from giving to their Representatives and Senators their notions, views, or arguments as to any particular matter here?

Let us inquire by what right anyone can eliminate the freedom of an American citizen, who may be a taxpayer or no, but who is at the base of our sovereignty, by whose voice Presidents and Congresses, at least Representatives, are chosen. How is it that by a mere Executive declaration he can be shorn of his privilege of free thought and free speech? Is it best for this Government that he should be so shorn?

It is a new idea. We have conducted a republican government for more than a hundred years. In its freedom and largely by its freedom we have produced the most wonderful republic of history. Is there any clause in the Constitution of the United States which confers power upon any Executive officer, whether he be a President for the time being or what not, to put his hand over the mouth of a free, independent American citizen, and say to him: "You shall utter no word respecting your interests, and you shall urge no opinion upon the man who you may have, in part, chosen to go to Washington to represent you?"

Has Congress conferred or undertaken to confer any power on the Executive, apart from what may be his constitutional right as Chief Executive, thus to gag and thus to eliminate from the society of those who have a right to hold opinions and to express them, the class of people who may for the time being be rendering some service to the Government of the United States under Executive appointment or under service classification in the service of the United States?

My remarks so far, Mr. President, are applicable only to the civil appointees who are in the service of this people. It may be that there may be a differentiation between them and those who are in the naval or military service. The naval and military service is more restricted; the discipline of both Navy and Army requires more rigid rules. Yet my mind hesitates to give immediate assent, and I gravely question the right of a commander to sever the tie of communication between a sol-dier or a man in the Navy with that class of men who represent the sovereign authority of the United States in the House of Representatives and the sovereign authority of the United States in the Senate, both composing the Congress who are here to make laws for the people.

It is possibly true—and I say possibly on account of the doubt in my own mind on the subject-that such a rule might be made applicable to those in the military and naval service. To them the President occupies a separate and exclusive relation, one that nobody else can occupy, and one that is peculiar to itself. He is the Commander in Chief. Congress also occupies a peculiar relation, in that it has power given to it in specific terms under the Constitution to make rules and regulations for their conduct. Under the clauses of the Constitution as to the Commander in Chief and those as to the rules and regulations that may be passed by Congress it may be. I will not undertake to say either that it is or that it is not, for I have long since learned that a patient consideration of questions like this is essential to the crystallization of the mind after reflection and study upon the right solution of them. I am not one of those, Mr. President, who can be waked up suddenly with ready-made conclusions upon the many questions which may be presented to us here.

But as to the civil service it is very different. I am not so well informed as to be able to lay positive and clearly formed views before the Senate, but at least this is a very grave matter, and it is one on which the Senate should hesitate to express to the country its opinion or to base action upon that opinion until it has had opportunity for full reflection.

I would much prefer, especially if it be agreeable to the Senator from Maine, that this resolution should be referred to the committee of which he is chairman, the Naval Committee, which is a very enlightened body, or, perhaps, better to the Committee on the Judiciary, that they may give to the Senate a sedate and well-considered view. I think the dignity of the subject deserves it, and it is one that, to my mind, is not at any rate clear of doubt.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Daniel] that this is a matter of grave importance and one that should not be acted upon under the necessary rule of haste that would govern us in disposing of it at this time. This resolution affects over 200,000 citizens, at least as an expression of opinion, because of certain words in an Executive order, which provides

All officers and employees of the United States of every description, serving in or under any of the Executive Departments—

The word "employees" includes every man working in a navy-yard; it includes every man working in the public-land service. Such men are employees of the Government.

We are not passing an Executive order. Mr. HEYBURN. I understand that, but we are impliedly recognizing the existence of it.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, we are simply reciting it. Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this Executive order has been called to my attention in a practical sense many times. I will not at this time pause to recite all the occasions, but on more than two occasions recently orders have been telegraphed to men who come within this classification, forbidding them to attend the conventions of their party; men who are accus-tomed to taking part in the political affairs of the country, who go to the conventions for the purpose of participating in the formulation of declarations of principles that shall express the will of the party for the guidance of, or at least as a suggestion to, the men who make the laws. I have on a number of occasions, when public questions have arisen, communicated with men who come within this class, asking them for facts, conditions, and circumstances surrounding the questions or affecting the questions to be determined here. I do not of course suppose it would be claimed for a moment that any law could be passed that would prevent a member in either House of Congress from communicating with a man in regard to a public measure simply because he was an employee of the Government. I do not believe it would be within the power of the President, in making an Executive order, or of Congress, in the enactment of a law, to prevent any member of either House from obtaining information which would enable him to more intelligently perform a public duty simply because he must inquire of those who are within the Government service.

or in any way

Those are the words contained in the Executive order in this connection.

All officers and employees of the United States of every description, serving in or under any of the Executive Departments—

That is very broad; that covers every employee in the public-land service, in the forestry service, and in many other branches and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay—

The word "solicit" there would be probably held to include suggesting legislation that would increase their pay. That would perhaps be termed a "solicitation on the part of the employee of the Government"— or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in

Would that mean voting at an election? Would that mean electioneering for a man because it was known that he entertained certain views with reference to the organization of the Government or any of its branches that might affect his interest? It is broad enough to cover that. It has been held in its application to cover it. We certainly could not indorse that doc-save through the heads of the Departments.

That would preclude an employee from taking part in the forming or passing of any resolution that was intended to influence the minds of Senators or Members of the other House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. HALE. The Senate is soon to adjourn, and there can, therefore, be no vote on this resolution to-day. from Idaho will yield to me, I will say that practically I have accomplished all that I desired in the matter, and I will move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think that motion can hardly be made until I have concluded the very brief remarks which I intend to make, as I desire them to appear all at once. Mr. HALE. I put myself entirely in the hands of the Sena-

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well. In a moment I will yield to the Senator from Maine to make his motion.

Mr. HALE. I will make the motion after the Senator has concluded his remarks.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the remarks I have already made apply to the Executive order. I would call attention to the fact that article 232, which is referred to in the pre-amble, does not contain the word "employees." That word is found only in the Executive order, and not in article 232 of the regulations for the government of the Navy of the United States, so that that word would not apply.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I see that the Senator has the Executive order in his hand. Will he kindly give us the date of it?
Mr. HEYBURN. The Executive order was issued January

31, 1902.

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems, then, that it has gone unchallenged and has been in effect all these years, and now it is suddenly discovered that the President has transcended his anthority

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would not so state it. I would not say that the President has transcended his author-It is not necessary to be so harsh in criticism of an official act as to charge that it was an act transcending the authority of the official. All executive officers, and some legislative officers of the Government, sometimes are mistaken in the limits of their power and in their expressions on such questions as this. It is entirely becoming, and entirely within our province, at this time to criticise this as a measure pending before us, and limit our criticism to the resolution before us, without entering upon any criticism of the individual or official act of the President of the United States. I do not desire to be understood as indulging in a criticism of the President's act, but as indulging in a criticism of the resolution now before us, incidentally referring to the official proclamation.

Now, I desire to call attention to the last paragraph, which is the resolution itself, which reads:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate as to whether the foregoing order—

That includes the Executive order I have referred toand regulations-

That does not include employees at all-have been, or are being, violated by any officer or employee of his Department-

That would mean a very extensive investigation, because I have, and I have no doubt that every other Senator has, letters every day from employees of the Government affecting public questions that might be said to affect them in their material interests, either as to the tenure of their employment or their compensation or in a dozen other ways-and to report the result of his investigation to Congress.

Mr. President, I do not think that we ought to give the implied sanction of the Senate to the Executive order at this time in the manner proposed by this resolution. We are the representatives of the employees of the Government just as much as we are the representatives of the farmers, and they are not disfranchised or deprived of any rights pertaining to citizenship because they are in the employ of the Government. I certainly should oppose the adoption of a resolution that would even imply that they were.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to amend the resolution—
Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me—
The VICE PRISTIPLY Deep the Senator from Wice relation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I was about to move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it would be well, if it is to be referred, that it be referred after proper amendments have been made to it in the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out of the first line of the preamble the words "order and."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The Secretary. In the first line of the preamble, after the word "following," it is proposed to strike out the words "order and;" so as to read:

Whereas the following regulations are now in force, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I move also to strike out from and including the heading "Executive order," on the first page of the resolution, all that follows on that page, so that it will leave the resolution with the preamble simply setting forth the "Regulations for the government of the Navy of the United States."

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SPOONER. With that amendment, I hope the resolution will be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

It is proposed to strike out from the pre The SECRETARY. amble of the resolution, on page 1, the following:

EXECUTIVE ORDER.

WHITE HOUSE, January 31, 1902.

All officers and employees of the United States of every description, serving in or under any of the Executive Departments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay, or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way save through the heads of the Departments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service.

Theodore Roosevelt.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would suggest that the words "or employees in the executive branches of the Government" should likewise be stricken out in the first paragraph of the preamble.

I think that would be an improvement. Mr. SPOONER. Yes; let those words be stricken out.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. In the first paragraph of the preamble, in line 2, after the word "officers," it is proposed to strike out "or employees in the executive branches of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, is this resolution now before the Senate for action?

Mr. HALE. I was on the point of moving that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DANIEL. Do I understand that there are certain amendments pending to the resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin proposed certain amendments to the resolution, which have been agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I did not understand that.

Mr. HALE. Of course if the resolution can be passed unanimously, I shall be glad to have that course followed; but if there should be a vote called for upon it, we might possibly find ourselves without a quorum.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the resolution will pass.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the

Mr. DANIEL. I object to the passage of the resolution at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. HALE. Then I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

ESTHER A. CLEAVELAND.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7099) granting an increase of pension to Esther A. Cleaveland, which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty and insert "eighteen."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference with the House on the bill and amendment, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. McCumber, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO.

I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 28, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Saturday, January 26, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. Reid, of Arkansas, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COOSA RIVER IN ALABAMA.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24603) to authorize the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Coosa River, in the State of Alabama.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Coosa River near Talladega, Talladega County, in the State of Alabama, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.
Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, when the request came to me from the president of the railroad company, whose head-quarters are in Atlanta, Ga., to introduce this bill, without a thought that the bridge would be built in Alabama across the Coosa River, that it was a local question, I introduced it when I should have referred it to the Alabama delegation. But it never occurred to me, and I want to say that it was introduced with no idea of discourtesy to that delegation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar the bill (S. 7034) to incorporate the Interna-tional Sunday School Association of America.

The SPEAKER. Has the bill been heretofore read to the House?

Mr. KEIFER. I think the bill was read on the 17th.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether the bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. KEIFER. It has, and I understand it is a unanimous report.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question, and I reserve the right to object. This bill confers upon the proposed corporation an unlimited power to buy, receive, hold, and own real estate, and I think it is in some respects a dangerous precedent.

I do not like to object to the organization of a corporation for such a worthy purpose as the promotion of Sunday schools. But I do object to the policy of vesting in any such a corporation an unlimited power to receive and hold real estate and withdraw it practically from the taxable resources of the country. Not a great many years ago it was necessary in England to pass what is known as the "statute of mortmain" to withdraw from dead hands property placed in religious trust and out of the reach of the tax collectors, and for these considerations I shall object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Allow me to explain. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If I am, I will withdraw my objection, Mr. KEIFER. I think it is fair to say that this organization as it is proposed to be incorporated has been one of universal usefulness in this country. It has its different branches of work established all over the country, east, west, north, and south. It is probably essential to its entire universal charitable and useful purposes to have and own in certain localities some property, but it is not intended to become a property-owning corporation, except to own property that is necessary for the purposes of transition and the transaction of its necessary business and for the purpose of building up a fund to promote Sunday schools in America and purely by donations. Nothing is to be purchased, as I understand it; this corporation will have no property except such as may be donated, and in its unincorporated condition it never has had. If the objection of the gentleman shall prevail, it could to-day, in the name of some individual as a trustee, take and hold real or personal estate for the unincorporated to the condition of the gentleman shall prevail. It is the condition of the gentleman shall prevail the condition of the unincorporated that the condition of the purely condition. porated International Sunday School Association. But at the same time all this question of taxing property that would be owned by a Sunday school association is a question of State taxation and not a question for us to determine here.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the bill reserve the right to repeal, alter, or amend the charter?

Mr. KEIFER. I am not sure, because I have not looked at it with that view. This bill was introduced by Senator Mc-CREARY, of Kentucky, and was referred to the Committee on Judiciary in the Senate. It underwent some revision there, first, because they concluded that it was best to require the principal office to be kept continuously in the District of Columbia, and in the Senate the bill was further amended by providing that the majority of the incorporators should be citizens of the United States. Some of those named in the bill are citizens of Canada, but a large majority are citizens of the United States. There is no purpose to build up a property organization. It is not for the purpose of acquiring property and using it except for the purposes of carrying on their work by employing people to work all over the country. It applies as well in Chicago, Philadelphia, Louisville, and Birmingham, and all over.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I, of course, know nothing about the purpose of the organization except as it is expressed in the bill, and unless the bill limits the amount of real estate the proposed corporation may own to that which is reasonably necessary for the purpose of its creation, I shall oppose it, and feeling that way, I shall object to its consideration this morning.

Mr. KEIFER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this language

to take and hold real or personal estate by purchase, gift, devise, or bequest, and to manage, sell, convey, or transfer the same for the purposes of the association.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes, without limit,

Mr. KEIFER. That is exactly the language the gentleman said he would want

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will ask the gentleman to withdraw his bill for this morning.

Mr. KEIFER. I shall be compelled to do this if you object, but will call it up soon again.

Mr. LAMB. Why not withdraw the objection. Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will not withdraw the objection. Mr. Speaker, I object.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. MADDEN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 23558) amending an act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill, and pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may be closed at 1.15, the time to be equally divided between the majority and minority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate on the agricultural appropriation bill close at 1.15 p. m. to-day, the time to be equally divided. Is there objection?

There was no objection,

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gen-tleman from New York, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. Fos-TER of Vermont in the chair.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Illinois proceeds I would like the privilege of asking the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth], one or two questions on a subject in which I am interested.

Mr. LAMB. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman will have full opportunity for that under the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WADSWORTH, I have yielded the floor to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], but I should be very glad to answer any questions, if the gentleman from Illinois will

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Alabama will ask the questions on debate under the five-minute

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee, for a short time, to the question of seed adulteration. At the last session of Congress there was enacted a law in reference to the adulteration of food. All my life I have had some connection with the subject of food, as every other Member of Congress has had, and all my life, nearly, I have had some connection with the question of seeds. In early life I had occasion to study somewhat the subject of seed as a matter of business, and in a very modest way at present for years I have been an amateur collector of seeds and have become yery much interested in the subject, and in the course of my personal investigations I have learned somewhat in reference to the amount of the adulteration of these seeds which are sold throughout the country by the seedsmen to those who plant, especially forage crops and cereal seeds. I do not make these remarks in connection with the free seed distribution, though it is doubtless true that if the seedsmen of the country would give more attention to the question of the adulteration of seed by some of their members and less attention to the small free seed distribution by Congress they would confer a greater benefit upon the country. [Applause.] And although I have never believed myself that the free distribution of seed was a governmental function, I have no doubt whatever that the seed distribution made by Congress of pure seed has a great tendency to impel the seedsmen also to sell pure seed in competition with those which come in the hands of private individuals received from the Government. But the adulteration or misbranding of seed, while it is not in one way so extensive, and my information leads me to believe that not more than 10 to 20 per cent of the seed which is sold is adulterated, yet 10 or 20 per cent of the seed sold, if adulterated, is a very large proportion; but it is to be considered that the adulteration of the seed to which I refer is an adulteration willfully made for the express purpose of defrauding the person who purchases the seeds. There are in this connection four general classes which may be condemned. First, the direct adulteration of seed, which means the mixing of an inferor or smaller priced seed with a superior and higher priced seed and selling it under the name of the higher priced seed; or, second, the substitution of one kind of seed for another.

An illustration of the first method is, for instance, the adulteration of the common blue-grass seed with the Canadian bluegrass seed, the Kentucky blue-grass seed being a higher priced seed and of much more value when sown than the Canadian blue-grass seed. An illustration of the second proposition is the sale of the Canadian blue-grass seed unadulterated under the name of Kentucky blue-grass seed. Another form is the introduction of weed seed. One of the most common and pernicious enemies of clover is the dodder plant, with which I suppose most of the farmers of the House are familiar. The dodder is a parasite, starts from seed grown in the ground and as soon as it attaches itself to the neighboring plant it disconnects itself from the ground and lives as a parasite on the plant to which it connects itself. You will often see in a clover field a yellow spot. That yellow spot means a spot of dodder, and it is one of the most pernicious enemies of the clover field. We have just across the Canadian border a country which forbids at home the sale of these seed, the weed seeds, but permits them to be exported. Along the same line is a kind of seed known as "catchfly," another enemy of the clover seed. The Canadian government by its law forbids the sale of clover seed in Canada if the seed in that country contains catchfly seed, but permits its export, and last year in two samples there were 10,000 pounds of the so-called "clover seed" imported into this country from Canada consisting almost entirely of catchfly seed, used either for direct sale or more probably for adulteration. Another method is the sale of dead seed. One gentleman of the House called my attention yesterday to a case with which he was familiar where a seed concern in his State had gone into the hands of a receiver. In the inventory was listed a considerable quantity of onion seed more than two years old. They had testified in the receivership proceedings that onion seed more than two years' old would not germinate, and yet a considerable value was placed upon the inventory item of onion seed more than two years' old, and when asked why they considered it of value the answer was, "It is of value because it increases the bulk and quantity of the seed which we sell" by adulteration.

Last summer there was but little good onion seed grown in the Two years ago there was a smaller quantity than usual of good onion seed grown in the country. this year gentlemen will find very little of it in their Congressional distribution. You may find some, but all of the old onion seed that may have been in the warehouses for the last ten years, perhaps, will be sold this year as fresh onion seed, though not a pound or particle of it will germinate. It will be mixed with seeds, and the percentage of germination of the lot may be one-half. All of the new seed may germinate, but none of the old seed will do so.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said, in Canada, which is one of our close neighbors in the furnishing of some kinds of seeds, they forbid the sale of red clover, alsike, timothy, and other seeds containing various of these weed seeds, mentioning among them the catchfly, and then they say:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to seeds marked "Not absolutely clean," and held or sold for export only.

Under the item which has been carried for several years in the Agricultural appropriation law the Department of Agriculture has been collecting samples of seeds and making analyses. These samples of seed are obtained by mail, by purchase. As a rule the seed houses which send out a quantity of seed by mail are more particular than when sold in other ways. I have obtained, myself, from the Department of Agriculture, seed which they have collected in this way, and from seed which they have collected at my request, forage seed, during a recent period, not running very far back, over 100 samples bought in the open market, which were adulterated. Some of these adulterations run as high as 90 per cent adulterant. Of the seed which has been examined by the Department there were 352 samples of alfalfa seed. One hundred and sixty of these, or nearly one-half, were found to contain dodder seed, the parasite to which I have referred. Of 522 samples of red clover seed, 116 contained dodder seed. Of 61 samples of low-grade red clover seed, imported during the fiscal year 1905-6, 75 per cent contained dodder seed. And these samples contained also nearly 30 other kinds of weed seed.

Of seventeen samples, representing an aggregate of 282,000 pounds imported during the fiscal year 1906, less than 50 per cent was pure alfalfa seed that germinated. Two lots, representing 33,000 pounds each, germinated 8 and 9 per cent onlyonly 8 or 9 per cent of this imported seed. Of sixty-one samples of red-clover seed imported during the same period, representing an aggregate of 990,000 pounds, less than 43 per cent was red-clover seed that germinated. These seed are sent here for the purpose of adulteration. In Europe there is a system of voluntary seed examination, prevalent as a matter of custom, by which seed in a given locality is examined and the certificate is made, and no one buys seed in one locality from a seed man in another locality, except upon a large scale; and the result is that there is sent to this country an immense quantity of these inferior seeds.

I have found some samples of orchard-grass seed which were adulterated by crushing up old oats and mixing with the orchard-grass seed, and I doubt very much whether any Member of the House would be able to distinguish it unless he were a seed expert.

Among the samples collected I have brought a few onto the floor of the House. There is one kind of seed of which a large quantity has been imported into this country. It is not planted by itself. I believe there is one seed house which advertises it for people to plant. Probably not a hundred pounds of that kind of seed a year is planted by itself all over the United States. Considerable quantities are imported. It is the so-called "yellow trefoil" seed. The average person can not dis-tinguish it from clover or alfalfa. It is imported into this country for one purpose only, and that purpose is for using it as an adulterant. It is of itself of little value. It destroys the usefulness of a clover field or an alfalfa field. It is a distinct injury to the seed with which it is mixed and to the plant which comes from that seed. And yet we permit the importa-tion of that seed for the sole purpose of swindling the people who buy the seed for planting.

Here is a sample [exhibiting] of red-clover seed adulterated with 11 per cent of yellow trefoil. Another sample [exhibiting] of red clover which is adulterated with 14 per cent of yellow trefoil.

Mr. SOUTHARD. How much of that seed is imported every year?

Mr. MANN. I am not able to tell the gentleman exactly, although I requested the Bureau of Statistics to furnish me that information. They did not have the exact amount, but the Agricultural Department informed me that a considerable amount of that seed is imported, being imported mostly from Hamburg, which is the center of seed distribution in the world.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is imported in its mixed form or does it come in unmixed and is mixed after it is received in this country?

Mr. MANN. A considerable proportion of it is imported without being mixed at all. A considerable portion of it is imported after it is mixed with alfalfa and clover seed.

Mr. STERLING. I would like to ask the gentleman, if he knows, does the Agricultural Department import vegetable seeds, or any portion of them, that have been distributed through the membership of this House or is it raised in this country?

Mr. MANN. I think the Agricultural Department does import some seed for distribution.

Mr. STERLING. The ordinary garden seed?

Mr. MANN. I do not think the ordinary garden seed is imported, but certain classes of seed, such as certain kinds of celery and Danish and Holland cabbage seed, are imported by the Department and distributed; and where they import seed there are some classes of seed that it would be cheaper to import than to raise in this country.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I would like to ask the gentleman a further question. Now, as to this yellow trefoil, I understand it is a plant of little value. For what purpose is it raised in foreign countries—for the seed, or for what purpose?

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt there are places where the yellow trefoil will grow on poorer ground than clover will grow on, and undoubtedly it is grown in some places abroad and might | possibly be done in this country, but, as a matter of fact, it is not grown in this country to any extent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it grown for forage purposes or simply for manure purposes?

Mr. MANN. It is like all other plants that may be used for forage or soiling purposes. It is a legume. Here is a sample of Kentucky blue grass with 31 per cent of Canada blue grass. Here is another sample adulterated with 77 per cent of Canada blue grass; another with 25 per cent of Canada blue grass, and another with 90 per cent of Canada blue grass, it being remembered that there is a distinct difference in the value both as a forage crop and as to price between the two. I have noticed in American seed catalogues that Canada blue grass is quoted at 61 cents a pound. Canada blue grass is worth in some catalogues $6.50 a hundred, while the lowest price quoted for Kentucky blue grass is $12 per 100 pounds.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentle-man, before he gets so far away from alfalfa seed, whether in any of the adulterations reported it is shown that Russian thistle seed is found? Russian thistle seed, if I may be allowed-

Mr. MANN. Is the greatest disaster to this country.
Mr. KEIFER. I agree with the gentleman, and was anxious to know whether alfalfa seed which has been reported as adulterated contained Russian thistle seed?

Mr. MANN. I think Russian thistle seed does not usually get into alfalfa seed.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman will allow me to say, that in points in western Nebraska, farther west, the alfalfa has Russian thistle seed in it, but it is taken out when carefully cleaned.

Mr. MANN. I think it goes out in the cleaning. Here is another sample of Kentucky blue grass with 25 per cent of Canada blue-grass seed; another with 36 per cent; another with 24 per cent of Canada blue-grass seed; another with 24 per cent of Canada blue-grass seed; another with 83 per cent, and another with 28 per cent of Canada blue-grass seed.

Now, I have a great number of other samples like these showing the same adulteration, all purchased at different times from different seedsmen in the market, some adulterated with small quantities of Canada blue-grass seed, some with large quantities; and these adulterations are not accidental; they are intentional adulterations. The Canada blue-grass seed is purchased by itself, mixed with the other seed, and sold in the name of the other seed, at the price of the other seed or at some slight reduction from the proper price of the other seed.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman believe that the Canada blue-grass seed, which he says is cheaper, does any damage permanently?

Mr. MANN. The Canadian blue-grass seed is a good foragecrop seed.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Now, may not some farmers buy the mixture intentionally?

I have no doubt that some farmers buy the mix-Mr. MANN. ture intentionally.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Are they not entitled to do so?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to their selling the mixture intentionally; but what I object to is selling Canada blue-grass seed by the seedsman who knows very well that a quantity of this seed has been placed in Kentucky blue-grass seed; and when he sells what he calls Kentucky blue-grass seed to people he is selling Canada blue-grass seed, which is worth only half as much. [Applause.]

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not true that if a seedsman sells one seed and represents it to be another he is liable in damages if it turns out to be a different crop from what he has repre-

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not propose to discuss with the gentle-man a question of law. He is a great lawyer, and can answer the question better than I can.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman think this is, under any circumstances, a proper subject of legislation?

Mr. MANN. I would not be discussing it if I did not think it a proper subject of legislation.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You think the Government ought to legislate on that?

Mr. MANN. I would not take the time of the House if I am not think so. The Government is the only power that can legislate in reference to the importation of seeds, and the only power that can legislate in reference to interstate commerce in

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does not the gentleman think this subject will regulate itself just the same as the sale of furniture or clothing or shirts or anything else in the market?

Mr. MANN. I am not going to discuss the question of shirts. The gentleman and I might not agree on that; but in reply to his question I will say that this subject has not regulated itself up to the present time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is getting worse all the time. Mr. MANN. The truth is that, let alone, the evil is constantly growing, and the importation of worthless and adulterant seeds from all over the world into the United States is increasing. They are dumping their chaff upon us. They are dumping their weed seeds upon us; they are dumping seed upon us which is used only for purposes of adulteration; and whereas the other countries of the world require that pure seed shall be sold to their own farmers, they permit worthless and impure seed to be sent to this country, and this Government sits by and makes no effort to protect the farmers of the United States against this spurious importation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Driscoll] that a farmer who lives in the blue-grass country would not take that Canadian blue-grass seed as a gracious gift-would not have anything to do with it.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman says foreigners are dumping these things on us. Are not our own seedsmen buying them and dumping them on American citizens by means of fraudulent representations, and not telling the truth about what they are doing?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is correct, and so was I. Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman allow me to read him this paragraph from the Secretary's report?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield me more time, I will let him do anything.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will yield the gentleman two minutes Here is what the Secretary of Agriculture says on just what the gentleman has mentioned:

The investigations of seed adulterations previously mentioned in these reports have been continued, and there is evidence that the publication of the names of firms found to be seiling adulterated seed has been the means of checking the evil. In all this work the Department has but one object, namely, to protect the farmer from the unscrupulous dealers who make a practice of foisting bad seed upon him. The rank and file of Amercan seedsmen do not follow any such practice and are as anxious as the Department to protect the farmer.

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt about that at all. Mr. WADSWORTH. I object to all seedsmen being branded as thieves

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman did not understand that I branded all seedsmen as thieves.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The most of them are honorable mer-

Mr. MANN. If the very distinguished gentleman from New York had listened to what I said-

Mr. WADSWORTH. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I was listening to him.

Mr. MANN. He would have discovered that I said, to begin with, that a very small proportion, not more than 10 to 20 per cent, of the seed which had been examined had been found to be adulterated, and it is partly for the purpose of protecting the respectable seedsmen from the improper rivalry of the impure seedsmen that I think we ought to have legislation on this subject.

Now, here is orchard grass. Orchard grass is one of the favorite forage crops, especially in places where there is shade. The favorite adulterants of orchard grass are meadow fescue and rye grass seed, the orchard grass seed being much more expensive than the other two. Here is one sample adulterated to the extent of 37 per cent, another to the extent of 24 per cent. another 50 per cent, another 56 per cent, another 40 per cent. I have not time to refer even to all the samples I and so on. have here, and I have many other samples of this sort in my

Here is a sample of alfalfa adulterated with burr clover seed to the extent of 11 per cent; one adulterated with trefoil to the extent of 33 per cent and burr clover 3 per cent; another sample of alfalfa adulterated with yellow trefoil 31 per cent and burr clover 6 per cent; another adulterated with trefoil 39 per cent and burr clover 3 per-cent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Have you the names of the sellers of those adulterated seeds?

Mr. MANN. I have not the names here; and I do not propose to give them.

Another one is adulterated with 35 per cent of trefoil and 5 per cent of burr clover, and so on. The gentleman from New York asked me if I had the names. I never considered it desirable or proper when endeavoring to obtain legislation to jump on particular individuals, and I do not think that is the method. Of course we have the names and records of each one of these samples and know exactly from whom they came.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The reason I asked the gentleman the question is because under the power given the Secretary of Agriculture he has the right to publish the names.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LAMB. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit some observations upon the all-absorbing seed question. ported by the Committee on Agriculture makes an appropriation, or recommends an appropriation, of $238,000 for the purchase, propagation, and testing of new, rare, and uncommon seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, foreign and domestic, to be distributed after consultation with Sena-tors and Representatives and Delegates in Congress "to actual experimenters only for experimental tests." This is the only provision made in the bill for the distribution of seeds. There has been a great deal of criticism of the practice that has been in vogue for a number of years in the distribution of garden seeds, ordinarily termed "Congressional seeds," to the people throughout the country. It may be that this practice is subject to some degree of criticism. My experience has been that it has resulted in a considerable good. Farmers and gardeners in the district. I have the bonor to represent have informed me redistrict I have the honor to represent have informed me repeatedly that they had got better results from Government garden seeds than from any seeds that they had ever procured, coming largely from that well-known principle that the frequent change of seeds from one part of the country to another is often a very profitable thing. Now, if the Committee on Agriculture had recommended the discontinuance altogether of Congressional distribution of seeds, and had reduced the appropriation correspondingly, the proposition would have addressed itself to me with a good deal more force than it now does. eliminate Congressional distribution of garden seeds, but we do not save one single penny by the operation. We spend all the money. Now, during the current fiscal year there is an appropriation of $242,000 for the distribution of seeds.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Is it not true that you can find seeds put up in New York in almost every market in the country?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I suppose so; I do not know much about that. But the appropriation for the current fiscal year Of that, $132,000 is used for Congressional disis $242,000. tribution, as it is termed. One hundred and ten thousand dollars is being used now by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purchase, propagation, and testing of new, uncommon, and rare seeds, bulbs, etc., domestic and foreign. The present bill recommends the appropriation of $238,000 for that purpose. will be the result? The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired

Mr. LAMB. I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr.

OVERSTREET]

Mr. OVERSTREET of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I desire in the brief space of time allotted me to make some remarks on the pending bill and in a general way to lay before this House some facts I feel impelled from a sense of duty to set forth. During the short time I have been a Member of this House I have painfully observed that the great agricultural interests of this country have been neglected by Congress and are suffering at the hands of our National Government. How it is that this great industry, the foundation stone upon which rests all our national greatness, has not received proper recognition from in-telligent Representatives in Congress is beyond my understand-The oldest, the most dignified, and the most independent of all the vocations among men, it deserves better treatment at our hands; but I want it understood in the beginning of these remarks that I am not asking alms of the National Treasury. My people did not send me here for that, but they expect of me that I shall demand their rights upon every issue raised whereby their interests are affected, and I will ask nothing more and I shall be satisfied with nothing less. [Applause.]

On the 13th of December just passed, the House being in the Committee of the Whole House and having under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, my colleague [Mr. Livingston] offered the following amendment:

The compensation, at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses, of special agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, $50,000, not more than $20,000 of which shall be used in the investigation of markets for cotton products; and the results of such investigation shall be reported to Congress.

The object of the amendment was to reinstate the current law as contained in that appropriation bill for the present fiscal year. The previous Congress had allowed the appropriation, but the committee at this session failed to incorporate it in the bill, and Mr. Lavingston's amendment sought to remedy that feature of it. But the amendment was lost, and the small, pittful sum of $20,000 that heretofore had been allowed, in order But the amendment was lost, and the small, pitithat our cotton trade might be extended and new markets for our cotton and cotton products opened up, has been disallowed, and what little aid the Government was giving the farmer in this direction has been withdrawn. Now, Mr. Chairman, for the life of me I saw no argument advanced, either by the gen-tleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER] that authorized the defeat of this amendment, and when this bill comes back to the House with a similar amendment from the Senate, as I understand it will come, I sincerely trust that this House will agree to the amendment and let it become the law again. During the debate on the amendment my colleague [Mr. BARTLETT] produced some strong arguments in favor of the measure, and in the course of his remarks said:

This great crop of ours is greater in value than all of the other crops of the country except corn, and the most remarkable thing is that with that crop, amounting to $650,000,000 a year, the raw material is not consumed at home, like that other great agricultural product which exceeds it in value, but two-thirds of it is sbipped and brings into this country every year hundreds of millions of dollars of foreign gold to create and increase our prosperity, not simply of its producers, but of the entire country.

While there was no yea-and-nay vote taken and I can not state positively how each Member voted, I will venture the statement that about the only Members voting for it were from cotton-producing States, and the rest, practically, voting against it. How, sir, can legislation be enacted that will redound to the benefit of the farmer unless the Members of this House will be more liberal and broad minded when they come to vote upon questions that affect the farmers' interest? We are not here to legislate for any particular section of the country or for any particular class of her citizens, but to pursue a policy that will be beneficial to all sections of the country and helpful to all classes of our people. This is a Government whose greatness and glory and whose permanency depend upon the intelligence of her people and the simplicity and uniformity of her laws. [Applause.]

There are Members here who are not acquainted with the cotton industry. They should be willing to hear the testimony and act upon it, of those who know the needs of the farmer. An industry that increases the wealth of the country six hundred and fifty millions annually, an amount almost sufficient to pay the yearly expenses of this Government, deserves the most careful consideration at our hands. A parsimonious policy adopted by the Government toward the cotton planter can not but be detrimental to our manifold and diversified industries. comparison, these United States may be likened unto a great, complex piece of machinery, but so nicely and precisely con-structed that if any of its smallest parts are out of gear the whole machinery is thrown into confusion and disorder. The cotton-producing States compose a part of this Commonwealth, and, in my judgment, not so insignificant a part as the votes of Members of this House would seem to indicate, and whenever you vote down a measure that is calculated to benefit a portion of this country you not only do harm to that immediate section, but you are helping to retard the prosperity of this great counbut you are neighing to retain the prosperity of this great cointry, whose Constitution you have sworn to defend and support and whose every interest it is your solemn duty to protect. I can scarcely believe that there is a gentleman here who would intentionally do an injustice to these people whose chief dependence is upon the production of cotton, but they certainly do not understand the situation. All we ask is that this Congress take hold of this question and cooperate with us in maintaining a steady and stable price for our product. This may be done in many ways. The opening up of new markets for our cotton goods would tend to diminish the surplus that now remains under present conditions, and would thereby cause the price to be regulated by the natural law of demand and supply. A change in the method of issuing monthly bulletins by the Department of Agriculture showing the condition of cotton would also help, I believe, in maintaining a steady price. These bulle-tins should be issued weekly or daily, perhaps, and give to the cotton grower and the legitimate trade the information in installments, as it were, instead of withholding it until when it is given out to the public such excitement is produced among those betting upon the result of the estimate that the fluctuation in prices ranges at once from twenty to fifty points above or below the normal price, according as the report is "bullish" or "bearish," as it is termed. The planter feels obliged during all seasons of the year and every day in the week (Sunday excepted) to put his cotton upon the market in large or small quantities, as the case may be. He has to meet his obligations when they fall due. He knows when they mature, and cotton has to be sold to be converted into money for this purpose.

I know of instances where planters had shipped their entire crop of cotton to factors for the purpose of holding for better prices, and had advanced to them from time to time on this cotton as collateral an amount of money almost equal to the value of the cotton when a Government report would be issued indicating a larger yield than was expected, and upon the publication of this report prices rapidly declined until the planters' margin was exhausted and his cotton was put upon the market and sold at the lowest price of the season. In a few days, after the public had time to study and digest the report and confidence in the market had been reestablished, the number of points lost by the issuance of the report had been regained, and a much higher mark made than had been reached previous to the report. So that the Government report caused a decline in cotton sufficient to close the planter out at a distinct loss. And this is not an isolated case, either. Every Member of this House who comes from a section where cotton is produced will bear me out in the statement that numbers and numbers of farmers every year lose heavily by reason of the monthly crop bulletins issued by the Government. The position I take is: It makes no difference whether the report is correct or incorrect, the effect upon the market is the same. The information that is gathered day by day and week by week from the different correspondents throughout the cotton belt is thrown upon the market all in a lump, and the result is always the same, a fluctuating and spasmodic market for several days, and the farmer is bound to lose, for a quantity of cotton is certain to be closed out on rapid declines. I am borne out in this opinion by a statement of Mr. Harvie Jordan, president of the Southern Cotton Association, in a hearing had before the Committee on Agriculture last year, where he used the language:

I think it would have a tendency to break up speculation to have it so arranged that these estimates should not be issued at one time. They could show the condition of one State one day, and the condition of another State another day, and so on. Every safeguard should be thrown around the cotton crop of this country. It brings into this Union $650,000,000 annually and preserves a balance of trade with foreign countries in our favor. And a variation of one-half a cent a pound means a loss or gain of $25,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, look just a moment in another direction. The statistics of the world show a world-wide prosperity, the newspapers of England are replete with the unprecedented prosperity of the past year, and the United States are enjoying the same blessings despite the onerous loads imposed by unfair taxation. We have prospered under bad economic laws, and with better laws this prosperity would have been more equitably distributed. We are one of the leading nations of the earth, if not the leading nation, because of our free institutions, of the unequaled area open to free trade between the States, of our vast area of diversified natural productions, and of our regard for law, even though that law bears hard upon agriculture and in favor of manufactures. [Applause.]

The South, too, has prospered in spite of unjust and unfair legislation against her and in spite of the efforts of her enemies to retard her growth. Up to 1850, under a more generous legislation, she was a leader in production, but this beautiful region was impoverished by the civil war, and since then she has had only the legislative scraps from the national table. Despite all this the South has steadily grown in population and wealth. In agriculture she has gone forward by leaps and bounds, and on account of her rapidly increasing manufactures the eyes of envy from the East are turned against her. In cotton manufactures she has surprised the world. Cotton mills have begun to hum in the South with a musical cadence that promises a full symphony in the days to come. The cotton is there and there to stay, and the mills will more and more seek locations nearer the base of supplies.

The census authorities inform us that in 1900 cotton manufacture stood at the head of the textile industries with respect to all items covered by census reports, the value of the product being $332,800,000. The little mills of fifty years ago, operating a few hundred spindles, have given place to large establishments operating thousands of spindles, the improvement of which has brought a speed of from 5,000 to 10,000 revolutions a minute, and I am proud to say that this same census document gives the greater percentage of increase in cotton manufacture to the sunny South. The increase for all cotton-mill products in the United States was seventy-one millions, of which fifty-three million four hundred thousand was in the South.

In 1890 there was but 239 mills, with a capital of $54,000,009, employing 36,415 hands, and creating a product of $42,000,000. In 1900 there were 401 establishments engaged in cotton manufacturing in the South, with a capital of $125,000,000, employing 97,559 hands, and creating a product valued at $95,000,000, an increase of $53,000,000 in a single decade, or 128.8 per cent. The same census tells us that the lumber and timber industry has increased more rapidly in the South than in any other part of the country.

It might be interesting to notice some figures recently published in the Manufacturers' Record, which is considered a reliable publication. It says:

liable publication. It says:

In six years, with an increase in the population of about 2,400,000, or something more than 10 per cent, the South has increased the value of its farm products by $728,000,000, or 57 per cent, and the value of its manufactures $761,000,000, or 52 per cent. It has added 3,393,000 spindles to its cotton-mill outfit, an increase of 55 per cent, and its mills used in 1906 about 2,375,000 bales of American cotton, or 48 per cent more than in 1900.

In the six years the South's annual pig-iron production has increased by $96,000 tons, or 34 per cent; its coal production by 34,202,000 tons, or 69 per cent; the value of exports at its ports $1,777,000,000, or 38 per cent, though it furnishes more merchandise for export than it handles through its own ports, and in that time its railroad mileage has increased by 11,441, or nearly 22 per cent, and the assessed value of its property by $2,490,000,000, or nearly 48 per cent.

And just let me say that the Empire State of the South has

And just let me say that the Empire State of the South has not been laggard in her contributions to the general prosperity nor in those developments which mark a free and great people. Cotton is her greatest crop, and in 1890 she gave the country a crop valued at $62,750,000. In 1902 this had swollen to $69,000,000, in 1903 to $89,000,000, in 1904 to $92,000,000, and in 1905 to $103,000,000. In 1905 the census reported ginned for Georgia 1,750,000 bales, as against 2,598,949 for Texas. In the production of cotton Georgia ranks second.

In the production of cotton-seed oil and cake she also ranks second. In the production of turpentine and rosin Georgia acknowledges no superior, holding first rank in the imperial galaxy of States. In the olden days she won the title of Empire State of the South and proudly maintains that position to this good day.

In war as in peace her sons may be found in the front rank of men from any State or country for bravery, honesty, and chivalry, while her women are not excelled in all this world for beauty, refinement, and grace. [Applause.]

And among other Georgians the people of the First district claim to be an empire in the imperial State of Georgia, "an imperium in imperio," and I desire for a few moments to direct attention to this section of our country. It is my good fortune to represent a district of wealth, influence, and power. Its people are American to the core, believe in American worth, and hold for high American ideals. I have the honor to represent a district composed of twelve counties which for industry and honesty can not be excelled by any other twelve counties in the American Union, and in the productions which mark the progress of an industrious people they take high rank with the thousands of great counties which make up our glorious commonwealth. [Applause.] In it may be found the great canning district of Chatham County, which sends to the world the choicest products of canned corn, beans, tomatoes, and peas. melons Georgia excels all other States, while the First district furnishes no inconsiderable share. It is there sweet potatoes abound. Among all the increases which mark the census of 1900 there was no greater increase than that shown by Effingham, Bryan, and Liberty counties. Since the census of 1900 two new counties have been formed, Jenkins and Toombs, which now form a part of my district. The statistics of 1900 do not include these counties as separate entities, although their products for the most part are totaled in the other ten. In 1900 six of these counties—Bryan, Bulloch, Burke, Chatham, Effingham, Emanuel, and Liberty—produced 190,154 bushels of Irish potatoes—enough to feed 15,800 families a whole year, while Chatham alone produced 125,375 bushels, or enough to feed 10,000 families for a year. In the year 1900 we produced 595,375 bushels of sweet potatoes, as shown by the following table by counties:

	Bushels.
Bryan	30, 460
Bulloch	84, 542
BurkeChatham	79, 482 50, 748
Effingham	41, 239

Liberty	50, 475
McIntosh	41, 265
ScrevenTattnall	52, 364 86, 564
AULUMIA	. 00, 004

Eight counties in this district produced 150,000 bushels of pease, Screven being first with 38,813 bushels, Emanuel second with 33,443, while Bulloch and Tattnall ran close for third place. One county in my district, Tattnall, has made considerable progress in the production of tobacco, and it may be through its influence that the culture of tobacco may be more generally extended. While we are not in the best hay-producing region of the world, the forage crop of five of our counties in 1900 amounted to 12,000 tons, of which Burke County produced fully one-third. The Department of the Census says that recent experiments in Georgia indicate that, with the necessary buildings and machinery, sugar making can be as profitably conducted in Georgia as in Louisiana. People from Vermont glory in their maple sirup, but the Georgia cane sirup is unsurpassed any-

In 1900, 517,550 gallons of sirup were made in my district, distributed as follows:

	Gallons.
Bryan County	1, 170
Bulloch County	123, 269
Burke County	33, 644
Chatham County	12,650
Effingham County	43, 825
Emanuel County	92, 590
Liberty County	42, 716
McIntosh County	20, 550
Screven County	88, 186
Tattnall County	58, 900

It has been said that ours is a cotton country to the exclusion of everything else. From what has preceded it is plain that the first district of Georgia is susceptible of a wide diversification of crops, and that we have already diversified them to a large extent.

In corn, while we may not be able to compete with the great corn districts of the Northern and Western States, we are still able to make a good showing, as the following table discloses:

COTTO TTO 1300.
COTH THE 1300.		Bush	nels.

From Census Bulletin No. 40, for 1905, the cotton production of the first district aggregates as follows:

In 1905 the number of bales of sea-island cotton raised in the United States was 112,539, of which 19,490 bales were produced in the first district, or one-seventh of the entire seaisland cotton crop of the whole United States was produced in my district, and of the amount Bulloch County stands first with 10,494 bales, and Tattnall second with 7,506, the rest of the counties producing very little sea-island cotton. In fact, Bulloch and Tattnall counties seem almost to have a monopoly in the production of this great staple. It is the finest cotton in the world, and during the Christmas holidays it was sold on the streets in the city of Statesboro for 36 cents per pound.

The people of the district are proud of their great port at Savannah. The city's exports for the year 1905 were greater than the combined exports of all south Atlantic ports, and the accompanying table shows how rapidly business is increasing.

Exports for the year ending June 30—  1904 1905 1906 Imports for the year ending June 30—	$53, 770, 382 62, 244, 837 64, 839, 551
1904	924, 061
1905	1, 488, 692
1906	1, 503, 069

During the twelve months ending June, 1906, 44,372,031 of southern pine lumber were shipped from Savannah to New York, and during the same period 1,453,385 bales of cotton were received at Savannah for shipment.

So much for the district that lay in General Sherman's pathway on his celebrated march to the sea, and nothing now remains to mark his route. Such rapid recuperation from desolation and ruin the world had never seen before and I doubt if it ever will again. But, Mr. Chairman, this marvelous progress has not been with the aid of the Government. It has been wrought out of the loins of nature with the brains and brawn of southern manhood in spite of governmental favoritism toward manufactures and large corporate interests. In spite of the fact that the law-making power of this country has never recognized the rights of the "man behind the plow," has never consented to give him a square deal under the Constitution and laws of the land, but has left him to work out his own salvation with the intellect and muscle that the God of nature gave him, I say, in spite of all these things, he has made wonderful progress and added untold millions to the wealth of this country, and under more favorable conditions and more just and equitable laws his prosperity would have been tenfold greater than now.

But, sir, the plain working people, who are the mainstay of the nation's wealth, are reading the dispatches that are sent from this capital giving a daily record of what Congress is doing, and they will demand a more satisfactory reason than has yet been given why the Members of this House, with the impetuosity of young schoolboys, rush about in wild confusion eager to increase their own pay and in the next breath turn an unwilling ear to legislation designed to benefit the honest voters who sent them here. It is not right, and the day of reckoning will come when the people will rise up in their might and hurl from power the unfaithful Representative who legislated in his own selfish interest and neglected the interests of the people whom he was elected to serve. [Loud applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, on reading the report of the Agricultural Committee, as well as looking over the bill now under consideration, I notice that the appropriation of $52,000 heretofore made for the Bureau of Biological Survey has been omitted. A few minutes since I desired to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. Wadsworth] why that ap-propriation had been omitted. I did not have the opportunity to make the inquiries. I desired to know what reason there was for omitting that appropriation from this bill. I wanted to know if the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture had recommended it. I wanted to know, further, whether the Biological Survey had any opportunity of being heard or whether any witnesses in the hearings favorable to the elimination of this appropriation had been heard before the committee. I have been informed, reliably, I think, that the Secretary of Agriculture recommended a 25 per cent increase of the appropriation. The chairman of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] called at my seat a few moments since and told me that a provision had been made in the bill in lieu of the appropriation stricken out in behalf of the Bureau of Biological Survey, which, he thought, was sufficient, and could be found in the bill under the heading of "Entomological investigations," which provision I find relates alone to an investigation of the history and habits of "insects" injurious and beneficial to agriculture, horticulture, and arboriculture, ascertaining the best means of destroying those found to be injurious, including an investigation into the ravages of insects affecting field crops, etc. He admits that an important feature of the Bureau of Biological Survey has been omitted and not provided for at all, and that is game preservation and protection. Mr. Chairman, I think there is nothing more essential to the farming interests than to preserve and protect the lives of such birds as we know will destroy the "insects" that ravage the farmer's field crops after planting and while germinating. I have been advised from Montgomery, Ala., that on yesterday a vote was taken in the lower house of the legislature of Alabama almost unanimously indorsing a bill for the preservation and protection in our State of game. markable unanimity was brought about in the vote of the lower house of the Alabama legislature by reason of an able speech that was made by the gentleman in charge of the preservation and protection of game of the Bureau of Biological Survey, Mr. Palmer, who was invited to address the legislature by a joint resolution of the two houses. The address delivered by Mr. Palmer was strong, full of common sense, and abounding with most valuable information. It was commended highly by the leading newspapers of our State.

Our people are anxious to adopt some reasonable, sensible, and practicable law for the preservation and protection of the game of our State, and the address of Mr. Palmer was a great stimulant to guide the lawmakers of our State in the right way to do this. I feel confident that a law will be agreed upon by the legislature of Alabama at its present session that will protect and preserve the game of the State. Alabama desires to follow the example of many of the States of the Union in such enactments as will prevent the useless destruction of game. I can not, Mr. Chairman, in this discussion, with the time allowed me by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Lamb], who is in charge of this bill on this side of the Chamber, present the wonderful benefits that have accrued in behalf of the interests of farmers in many of the States of the Union by protecting and preserving the lives of certain classes of birds that destroy insects that ruthlessly ravage and destroy seed planted by Accurate statistics can be invoked to show the beneficial results from the standpoint of the farmers' interests in the States enforcing reasonable game laws and those that do not. We of the South, as a matter of sentiment, deplore the disappearance of the mockingbird. In certain sections of the South where this splendid songster but a few years since abounded and could be heard at all times, night and day, but now is rarely seen or heard. For mercenary purposes their nests are robbed of their young and the young birds sold and sent off to an "imprisonment for life" in a cage. For myself I would an "imprisonment for life in a cage. welcome a fair law that would protect the lives of our valuable birds. I would do it from a practical beneficial as well as a sentimental standpoint.

The information I desired to obtain from the chairman of the committee I hope will be given before this discussion closes. What reason was there for striking out the appropriation under existing law of $52,000 for the benefit of the Bureau of Biological Survey? Did anyone appear before the committee asking that no money be appropriated for this Bureau? Did anyone contend that the Bureau was not efficiently, beneficially, and economically administered? I am informed that the Secretary of Agriculture advised that the appropriation provided now by law be increased. If this be true, then this House ought to be advised definitely why this important Bureau "should be dismissed without honor," because this is the effect of it. The "entomological investigations" that the chairman so kindly and courteously called my attention to certainly does not make provision for the useful functions of the "Bureau of Biological Survey." It is undeniable that this Bureau is conducted by competent chiefs. I print for information the fol-lowing well-expressed clipping from the New York Evening Post of January 24, which presents the workings of this Bureau most truthfully and justly:

WORK OF THE BUREAU.

WORK OF THE BUREAU.

The Bureau of Biological Survey studies the geographic distribution of animals and plants and maps the natural life zones of the country. It also investigates the economic relations of birds and mammals, recommends measures for the preservation of beneficial and the destruction of injurious species, and has been charged with carrying into effect the provisions of the Federal laws for the importation and protection of birds, and the game laws of Alaska. The work of the sarvey began on July 1, 1885. It is effected under three heads:

1. Geographic distribution, in charge of Vernon Bailey.—The office of geographic distribution has charge of field and office work relating to the collection, preparation, and elaboration of specimens and information illustrating the status and geographic distribution of North American animals and plants. It is engaged also in mapping the ranges of mammals, birds, reptiles, and plants, and the preparation of reports thereon.

2. Economic ornithology and mammalogy, in charge of A. K. Fisher.—The office of economic investigation has charge of field and laboratory work relating to the food habits of mammals and birds and of the collection of seeds and insects and other objects belonging thereto; also of the preparation of reports on the economic relations and food habits of birds and mammals.

3. Game preservation and protection, in charge of T. S. Palmer.—The office of game protection has charge of matters relating to the

3. Game preservation and protection, in charge of T. S. Palmer.—
The office of game protection has charge of matters relating to the preservation, protection, and introduction of game and other animals and of matters coming under the jurisdiction of the department by reason of the Lacey Act.

I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that by the work and efforts of this Bureau many foreign birds of most injurious and destructive tendencies have been kept out of our country, and they have encouraged the bringing in of desirable species. The Bureau sees to it that the interstate-commerce provisions of the game law are not violated. Shipments of game killed in violation of State laws into other States come under the jurisdiction of this Bureau, and this fact makes its maintenance most important. We ought not, while throughout the Republic there is a growing and wholesome development of public opinion for the protection and preservation of game, to put an obstacle in the path of such wise, humane, and profitable tendencies by driving this Bureau out of existence. Truly, Mr. Chairman, we ought to increase this appropriation, and I hope it will be done. It is money well spent by the Government.

I call the attention of the committee to the appropriation for the Biological Survey under existing law:

the Biological Survey under existing law:

Salaries, Bureaa of Biological Survey: One biologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $3,000; one clerk, class 1, $1,200; two clerks, at $1,000 each, $2,000; one clerk, $900; one messenger or laborer, $480; in all, $7,580.

Biological investigations: General expenses, biological investigations: For biological investigations, including the geographic distribution and migrations of animals, birds, and plants, and for the promotion of economic ornithology and mammalogy; for an investigation of the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry; for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments; for freight and express charges; for office fixtures and supplies, gas and electric current, telegraph and telephone service; for preparation and publication of reports, and for illustrations, field work, and traveling and other expenses in the practical work of the Bureau, and to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of an act approved May 25, 1900, entitled "An act to enlarge the powers of the Department of Agriculture, prohibiting the transportation by interstate commerce of game killed in violation of local laws, and for other purposes," $44,420.

Total for Bureau of Biological Survey, $52,000.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the report of the committee ought certainly to have given us the benefit of some reason why this Bureau should be abolished. Absolute silence is there.

I have listened, Mr. Chairman, with a great deal of interest and sympathy to the earnest efforts of my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. Candler], who is an honored member of this great Committee of Agriculture, to have stricken from this bill that paragraph that prohibits the Representatives of this House from distributing seeds among their constituents and turn it over to the Secretary of Agriculture and those he may name. I heartily indorse everything that he said in his great efforts for the interests of our farmers, and he deserves and will achieve

But it is quite a coincidence, Mr. Chairman, that the very seeds that we propose to distribute to our farmers should be denied by this bill that protection which the preservation of the lives of birds would give-which makes the birds the farmer's best

The protection of birds is not provided for in this bill at all. It is left out entirely. It is not even claimed to be within the purview of the section to which the chairman of the committee [Mr. Wadsworth] called my attention. I notice in another paragraph in this bill there is an item to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of "the gypsy and brown-tailed moths" amounting to $150,000. I am not fully advised as to the operations of the "brown-tailed" moth, but I have read somewhere that it is an "airy insect" that attacks coniferous trees, and that the only tree that can resist partially its savage attacks is the deciduous tree. It may be of a most violent and dangerous disposition. I presume it is, by reason of the fact of an appropriation of $150,000, while the birds are left out entirely. The friends of the birds—the protection and preservation of game—will look kindly to this.

Mr. LAMB. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Shep-PARD.]

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire briefly to advert to the splendid work of the Bureau of Soils of the Department of Agriculture. In my judgment, there is no bureau in this Government of more fundamental and far-reaching importance. The agricultural interests of the United States constitute by far the greatest natural resource from which the wealth of the people is derived. The farm value of agricultural products of the nation amounted to six and three-quarter billions of dollars in 1905, and this amount is annually increasing at a rate of 10 to 15 per cent. Since the last census was taken, in 1899, the annual value of farm products has increased $2,000,000,000per cent-above the amount for 1899.

Coupled with this increase in values of farm products has arisen an almost universal interest in the possibility of the exhaustion of the areas of land held under cultivation and particularly in the development of lands not now used for crop production, the extension of areas cultivated to special and highly valuable crops, and the introduction of new crops and of diversified crop interests into all sections of the country.

The past decade of the agricultural history of the country has been marked by entirely new lines of agricultural enterprise. The free government lands have largely been occupied by homesteads, and this outlet for surplus population, this resource for the production of increased amounts of the great staple crops, has become practically exhausted. At the same time the rate of increase of population from natural causes and from immigration has been such as to call attention of all thoughtful men to the possibilities of feeding and clothing the increased population. It is obvious that unless the agricultural lands of the country are rapidly and systematically developed the home demands for farm products will soon equal the home production, and the exportation of farm crops, which now dominate the export trade, must gradually decrease and soon cease. An attendant circumstance already demanding serious thought is the growing cost of all those fundamental necessities of life which taken in the aggregate has so markedly caused an increase in the cost of living during the past five years. Little relief from this condition can be anticipated unless, through increased areas and improved methods, the farm lands of the nation can be made to keep pace with this demand by increased production.

In this problem are embraced not only the needs and the welfare of the population actually engaged in farming but, as surely though indirectly, the needs and welfare of the entire consuming public.

The land actually held in farms at the present time comprises but one-half of the total land area of the country. Any great extension of this area is no longer possible since the unoccupied lands are largely mountainous areas or tracts hopelessly arid, and for which no irrigation water can be made available.

Of land held in farms less than one-half, or less than one-fourth of the total national domain, is actually improved land suited to the production of staple and special crops. The remainder consists of swamps, wood lots, hillside pasture, and unimproved grazing lands. While some relief may be secured from the utilization of portions of this partially occupied land, the great resource of American agriculture must be in the more intensive cultivation of lands already tilled, in the diversification of crops produced in all regions, and in the increasing general knowledge of agricultural principles by means of which each acre may be made to produce continuously in the greatest abundance.

So long as great areas of virgin land remained over which the increasing population might spread and upon which it might depend for increased food supplies little attention was paid to a careful inquiry into the actual land resources of the nation. long as new lands might be acquired cheaply and in considerable areas the intensive development of all sections except the neighborhood of great cities was neglected and relegated to a future That day has now arrived when the agricultural possibilities of the country must be carefully ascertained for the benefit of those now owning and tilling the land, and for the benefit of those who in cities and towns afford the great home market for farm products.

Since 1899 a study of the soils of the United States has been conducted by the Department of Agriculture, and soil surveys have been made of portions of forty-three States and four Territories, aggregating a total area of nearly 120,000 square miles. This work has shown that while the soil resources of the country may be limited in areal extent, there is a great diversity of soil conditions existing under a great range of climatic surroundings.

The 250 areas already examined have shown the existence of 450 different soils adapted to the widest diversity of crops and requiring greatly different methods of cropping and cultivation to secure the maximum returns.

Examinations of the soils of particular regions have developed an understanding of the characteristic soils upon which each of the great staple crops is produced to best advantage. It has been found that the soils of the great prairie corn belt differ materially from the characteristic wheat soils, and the profit-able extension of either wheat or corn production must take into account the facts so ascertained.

Studies of soils in the Gulf coast States have determined the characteristics of the soils upon which upland rice may be grown, and the soil surveys have indicated that westward from the mouth of the Mississippi nearly to the Rio Grande exists a belt of country within which the production of rice might be widely extended so soon as the location of the appropriate soils is With such an extension areas of prairie growing lands now valued at $10 to $15 per acre would become possible rice lands with a value two to three times as great.

The introduction of cigar filler tobacco into Texas and Alabama has followed and depended upon the examination of small areas of soils in those two States. Further studies of the Gulf State soils have shown that over hundreds of square miles of the typical tobacco soils exist and are now given over to cotton production or to grazing. Their value for tobacco raising is far There are few crops which depend so closely upon the greater. characteristics of the soil for peculiar properties and consequent wide variations in value as the tobacco crop, and without an accurate knowledge of soil conditions the introduction of new varieties of tobacco into any region is accompanied by great risk of loss and by a strong probability of discouragement and failure.

The increasing development of the production of winter and early spring truck crops for the northern markets has given rise to the necessity for a complete study of the soils of the Atlantic and Gulf States. The soil requirements of the different crops are very different and the conditions of soil and of climate vary markedly in different regions. The winter-grown crops of Florida and southern Texas require different soils and different soil handling from the early spring and summer crops of the Atlantic coast. The vegetables and melons and fruits each have their characteristic requirements and the extension of their production over areas now forested or newly cleared calls for a thorough foreknowledge of soil conditions.

The extension of orcharding into new regions has spread fruit culture over many sections whose soil adaptations are not clearly understood. The development of the Appalachian fruit belt from Pennsylvania southward to Georgia has shown that certain valuable varieties of apples may only be produced in re-stricted areas and upon a limited range of soils. The pippin belt of Virginia differs in soil and in climate from the conditions required for the red apples of the limestone valleys and the Piedmont Plateau. The orchard region of the Ozarks in Mis-souri and in Arkansas differs from all other sections of the country. In fact, each fruit belt possesses its own peculiar soils, some adapted to orcharding and others practically useless for such purposes. Many successes, as well as many failures, have had their cause in this fact.

In the Western States the attempt to bring additional land under cultivation and to increase the intensity of agricultural production through the irrigation of lands formerly dry farmed gives rise to a necessity for a careful study of these soils, their crop adaptation, the proper methods of trigation, and also the control of dissolved mineral matter which tends to accumulate as "alkali" under improper use of irrigation water. Millions of acres of valuable arid lands have been damaged or ruined by alkali, and the prevention of further damage, as well as the reclamation of land already injured, calls for an extension of the alkali work and further demonstrations of the methods of alkali reclamation.

These are but a few examples to show how the field study of the soils of the United States has led to an appreciation of the great soil problems with which the people of this country must deal. In order that the development of American agriculture may keep pace with the increase in population and the demand for products of the soil a very careful husbanding of soil re-sources is imperative. There remain no great areas over which farm occupation may spread. It is therefore through better knowledge of the resources of the entire country, through a closer specialization in adapting soils to crops, through a closer specialization in adapting soils to crops, through more systematic crop rotation, and better methods of soil management and conservation that the needs of the present and the future must be met. With careless methods and unsystematic agriculture the limit of crop production is being too closely approached. With increased knowledge of the fundamental principles of crop production and of crop distribution over the soils known to exist considerable increases in crop production may be provided for. That this may be secured in advance of the time of urgent need, a full study of the varied resources of American soils must be begun in time and pressed to completion. There is no greater fundamental necessity confronting the entire population of the country.

Under the capable and painstaking supervision of Dr. Milton Whitney, the Chief of the Bureau of Solls, remarkable progress is being made, and Congress should not hesitate to place the his hands sufficient funds. With a corps of efficient and devoted assistants, both in the office and in the field, he is achieving results which demonstrate beyond all question the supreme importance of this Bureau as a means of ascertaining the exact capabilities of American soils. [Applause.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to read for the information of the House the following concurrent resolution adopted by the legislature of Tennessee unanimously:

House joint resolution No. 7.

(1) Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the fifty-fifth general assembly of the State of Tennessee (the senate concurring), That the course of President Roosevelt in discharging the negro soldiers implicated in the Brownsville, Tex., shooting affair be, and the same is hereby, heartily commended.

(2) Be it further resolved, That our delegation in Congress, both in the Senate and House of Representatives, are respectfully asked to give their support to the President's course in discharging the negro soldiers. Adopted January 10, 1907.

Concurred in by the senate January 11, 1907.

This resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote in both houses.

EDW. B. Martix,

Chief Clerk of House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, it is known that the State of Tennessee is a close State politically. The Republicans have had pretty well founded hopes for years that they might be able to carry that State, and notwithstanding this fact this resolution was passed by both houses of the legislature of Tennessee by a unanimous vote, showing that neither politics nor the fear of political consequences prevented the members of the legislature of the State of Tennessee from doing that which they thought was right, and they request respectfully that the Senators from Tennessee and the Representatives from Tennessee shall reflect their wishes in this matter. In respectful consideration of the action of my State by the resolution just read I introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the judgment of the House of Representatives the recent action of the President of the United States in discharging without honor enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth Infantry was within the scope of his authority and power, and is approved and commended as a proper exercise of same.

Mr. Chairman, I never have on the floor of this House discussed what is called "the negro question," and I never intend to, but I hope that what I may say on this subject will be entirely divorced from any thought of whether these soldiers were black or white, but in another body action has been taken which necessarily does challenge the propriety, if not the authority, of the President of the United tSates to take the action which he In the debate his constitutional power was challenged, and, if I mistake not, it was proclaimed that he had violated the Constitution of the United States. If so, the President is subject to impeachment. Impeachment proceedings must be commenced and prosecuted by the House of Representatives.

While an ambiguous resolution has been adopted, contended for by those who favored an investigation as neither admitting nor denying his authority, but simply an investigation of the facts, I think it is proper that this body should express itself in no uncertain or ambiguous manner as to the proper exercise of authority by the President. This resolution has gone to the Committee on Military Affairs. I hope and believe that that committee will consider this resolution at an early day and report it favorably, and when they do I expect to take the time of the House to discuss it; but I want to state here that if the Committee on Military Affairs does not, in their wisdom, see proper to do this, if I can be recognized, at the proper time I shall move to discharge them from the further consideration of this resolution, and bring it before the House for its consideration.

I think it is right that we should do so, and in doing this it is not my purpose to discuss the question of punishment of the soldiers. That question should not be considered in connection soldiers. The action of the President was not taken as a matter of punishment, but as a matter of discipline; and I have no patience with those gentlemen who say that in this case we should permit ten guilty to escape rather than punish one innocent man. The Government, in the exercise of its functions. must often do that which may appear to be a restriction of the rights and the conveniences of those who may be termed "innocent," and which must be done regardless of the rights, privileges, and conveniences of those who may be denominated "innocent." Suppose these three companies of relative Suppose these three companies of soldiers had gone into the Republic of Mexico, and should have come in contact with persons suffering with a dangerous contagious disease, and become infected-at least, some of them-and it was impossible to know just who had come in contact with this disease. Would anybody say it would not be a proper exercise of authority and discretion, and a commendable one, to quarantine all the soldiers of those companies that went into Mexico until such a period of time had elapsed as would show by the course of the disease who was and who was not affected? Of course those soldiers who had not come in contact with the infectious disease would have been deprived of their liberty, would have suffered an inconvenience, for the benefit of the

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Floyd].

Mr. FLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I propose in the limited time allotted to me to discuss that provision of the bill which proposes to eliminate the free-seed distribution as heretofore practiced and to substitute therefor a provision for the propagation of rare and uncommon seed.

I want to say that I enter my protest against this provision as now incorporated in the bill. It has been insisted upon the floor in this House that the distribution of seed under the methods formerly practiced by the Department, under the direction of Congress, is not a function of the Government. I desire to insist that if there is anything in that legal point, that if it is not a proper function of the Government to distribute seed generally throughout the United States, for a stronger reason it is not a function of the General Government to distribute seed to a particular class, to experimenters for experimental purposes only, and that is what is proposed in this bill. proposed to strike out the $238,000 that was incorporated in the law of last year for general free distribution and to insert in lieu thereof a provision appropriating an equal amount for the purchase, propagation, and testing of new, rare, and uncommon seed, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, foreign and domestic, to be distributed to experimenters only for experimental purposes.

If this provision is adopted, who will receive the chief benefit of it? If an appropriation is to be made for the "purchase, propagation, and testing of new, rare, and uncommon seeds. bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, foreign and domestic," and the things so purchased are not to be distributed generally, "but are to be turned over to experimenters for experimental purposes only," would it not be possible for these seed companies, that are now protesting so loudly against Congressional free distribution of seed, to be among the chief beneficiaries of this $238,000 appropriation? What would hinder it? I fail to note any restrictions in the bill that would prevent Besides, who is better qualified or prepared to make such experiments than the great seed companies that are already engaged in the business of raising seeds, bulbs, plants, shrubs, and trees for the markets? These concerns are not precluded from the benefits of the act; indeed, I do not see how they legally could be, and hence I fear that the adoption of this provision would result not only in depriving the people of the country of the benefits heretofore received from a general freeseed distribution, but that the very interests—concerns and men that are protesting against this general free distribution of garden and field seed—would be the chief beneficiaries of an appropriation for the purchase of "rare and valuable seeds," to be distributed "to experimenters only, for experimental purposes only.

I can not too strongly express my disapproval of the proposition and shall vote against it, and shall vote for the substitute, to be offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], which, if carried, will appropriate this item of $238,000 for purchase and free distribution of garden, flower, and field seed, in keeping with a long-established custom of the country.

Now, the only objection to this custom, which has been in force and in practice since the creation of the Agricultural Department, that I have heard comes from those people in this Government who are engaged or interested in the propagation or sale of seed; in other words, the great seed houses. A year ago when this matter was before Congress the newspapers reported that there was held at the New Willard Hotel, in this city, a meeting of the representatives of these seed companies to devise ways and means whereby they could induce Congress to vote down the appropriation for this purpose; and it was reported that they passed resolutions providing that they should use the press, and the press was used for that purpose. But now what is proposed? It is proposed to strike that provision out and appropriate an equal amount of money-no economy to the Government-for the purpose of testing and propagating rare and uncommon seed, not to be distributed generally among the people like the former distribution was made, but to be parceled out and turned over to the experimenters for experimental purposes only. Now, if there is no law to justify the usual custom, I would like to have some distinguished lawyer who favors it to show what the authority is for this proposition.

Mr. COCKS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD] yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cocks].

Mr. FLOYD. Certainly, Mr. COCKS. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that a large portion of this appropriation will be used for the propagation of plants in this country as well as those brought from other countries. In other words, plant breeding is the real essential feature. If we could increase the number of grains of wheat grown in this country, and if by ten kernels the corn crop could be increased in the country, would it not be an improvement?

Mr. FLOYD. Certainly; and the best way to encourage this increase and to stimulate the farmers of this country is to have the Agricultural Department of this great Government examine and test these seeds and send out the best quality of seed of every kind—wheat, cotton, corn, vegetables, and other seeds—directly to the farmers, and let the farmers themselves experiment with them.

Mr. SIBLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?
Mr. FLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. SIBLEY. In reply to the question the gentleman from New York asked, Is it not a fact that America owes her supremacy as a grower of wheat to the effect that this very free distribution of Fulse wheat, which to-day holds the markets of the world and made American wheat preeminently supreme, came from the operation of this very seed law which they want

[Applause.]

Mr. FLOYD. I think so; and I am glad that the distinguished gentleman called my attention to that fact, for more than twenty years ago one of my distinguished predecessors sent this quality of wheat into my country, and I have had applications made for it time and again since I have been a Member of Congress, and have been repeatedly assured that the introduction of this and other varieties of wheat in this way was of infinite advantage to the wheat industry in my section. And the little distribution of cotton seed made last year, my own allotment which I sent out to some of my constituents, likewise proved to be of great value as an object lesson to those who received a supply. I was told by men who had planted the cotton seed sent them, and who experimented with it, that they had planted it alongside of the cotton planted with the ordinary seed they had been using and that the yield was 25 per cent greater than from the other seed used by them.

I want to call attention to the fact that it was remarkable that the great seed houses of this country should form an organization, a lobby, to try to influence Members of Congress to vote against this proposition. I can not believe that they are doing this on account of the value of the seed distributed or of any commercial disadvantage by reason of competition that is brought about by sending out these little packages throughout the country. I think the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] dropped a suggestion which shows the real reason for the fight of the seed houses against this proposition; that is, they are adulterating seed, mixing them. sending out an inferior quality of seed, and when the great Agricultural Department purchases seed for distribution, tests them as to quality, and sends them out among the people, the persons receiving them in every community, in every section of the country, have an example of the distinction between seed of real value and the worthless adulterated stuff that some of these great concerns are pouring upon the American market.

Mr. COCKS. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the provision in the bill at the bottom of page 33, where we have provided for analysis of every kind of seed and that the adulteration should be published to the world. Not only in this bill, but in last year's bill as well.

Mr. FLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I say that in my opinion the knowledge that is brought to the people of this country by sending out pure seed, pure in quality, and thus giving them an opportunity of testing them in comparison with those that are sold in the market, is the underlying cause of the seedsman's opposition, and is full justification on our part of this little free distribution of seed. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FLOYD. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, for the purposes and objects hereinafter expressed,

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited or who shall knowingly send or cause to be sent anything to be conveyed or delivered in violation of this section, or who shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried

Mr. WADSWORTH. I raise the point of order on that, Mr. Chairman. It is not germane, and it is new legislation.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman to be courteous enough to withhold his point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think we have passed a good deal of time in general debate, and this is not germane to the bill, and I can not withdraw it. I would like to accommodate the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MACON. I will undertake to see if I can not raise some point of order against some new provision that is contained in

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is your privilege.

Mr. MACON. It is not fair for you to try to bring this bill up, with new matter in it, and yet deny me the right to be heard on the floor on an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I offer, and to which the gentleman from New York seems to seriously object, is certainly germane to the matter before the House for consideration. The agricultural appropriation bill is supposed to deal with agricultural matters exclusively, and my amendment is in the interest of agriculture in the highest sense, and I can not understand how anyone could get his consent to make a point of order against it. The gentleman claims that it is new legislation, and hence objectionable under the rules of the House. I think he must object to it upon other grounds than that, for there are many new pieces of legislation embodied in this very bill that he as chairman of the committee presented to and is now attempting to conduct through the House just as he presented it. Certainly this amendment is no more offensive to the rules of the House than is the new legislation that he has in the bill to increase salaries. I notice that one of the arguments used by the gentleman in his report sustaining the committee's action in taking the free garden seed from the farmers is that the agricultural organizations of the country were against the proposition. I do not believe that is true, but if it is true and is good argument upon which to take free seed from the farmers, then I desire to offer the approval and indorsement of my amendment by the farmers' organizations of the country as a reason why it should be allowed to become a part of this bill,

I have received telegrams, letters, petitions, and resolutions from farmers and farmers' organizations from all over the Union urging the kind of legislation set forth in my amendment. In fact, the amendment is taken from a bill that I introduced in the House at a former day of this session, which called forth the indorsements just mentioned. If the gentleman can show more agricultural indorsements of his action of striking down the farmers' seed than I can show indorsing my course in introducing the bill that I now offer as an amendment to the pending bill, I will not complain of the point of order that he makes against it; but I insist that if it is the farmers he is trying to benefit and please, he will withdraw his point of order, for I have here on my desk a telegram informing me that the national convention of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative

Union of America, a farmers' organization representing more than a million tillers of the soil, assembled at Atlanta, Ga., on the 24th instant, had unanimously indorsed my bill to prohibit dealing in futures in agricultural products, and had extended me a vote of thanks for having introduced it. I also have a resolution adopted by the Southern Cotton Growers' Association of the State of Mississippi unanimously indorsing it, and many other resolutions adopted by county and local agricultural organizations indorsing it.

Yet, sir, when I present the measure here for the consideration of the Representatives of these people who support the world the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture rises in his place and throttles their efforts to carry out the will of the people who sent them here by interposing the technical parliamentary obstruction of a point of order. Ah, Mr. Chairman, is it possible that the gentleman will interpose so flimsy an obstruction to prevent the people's Representatives from voting upon a proposition that means so much to them? [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask to be allowed to extend my remarks in the Record by incorporating as a part of my remarks the telegram and a few of the resolutions to which I have referred. I will only burden the RECORD with a few of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The following is the matter referred to:

ATLANTA, GA., January 24, 1907.

Hon. R. B. Macon,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The national convention of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America assembled at Atlanta, Ga., January 24, 1907, unanimously extend to you a vote of thanks for your earnest and persistent. efforts in behalf of the American farmer, especially your introduction of the antibucket-shop bill of December 10, 1906.

R. H. McCulloch, Secretary.

HEADQUARTERS MISSISSIPPI DIVISION SOUTHERN COTTON ASSOCIATION, Jackson, Miss., January 3, 1907.

Hon. ROBERT B. MACON, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: By direction of the Mississippi division of the Southern Cotton Association, in convention assembled in the city of Jackson, on January 2, I am inclosing you a resolution which is self-explanatory. This resolution was unanimously adopted by the convention. With esteem and regards, I am, Yours, very truly,

WILL H. Woods, M. D.,
Secretary Mississippi Division Southern Cotton Association.

Resolved by the Mississippi Division of the Southern Cotton Association, That we approve and indorse the bill introduced by Representative Macon, of Arkansas, in the Congress of the United States, to make the dealing in future contracts for the sale and purchase of agricultural products felonious; and also the application of Representative Livingston, of Georgia, for a fraud order against the New York Cotton Exchange; and that the Senators and Representatives from Mississippi are directed to cooperate with Messrs. Livingston and Macon in their efforts to benefit the cotton interests of the South, and to secure justice for our section. for our section.

for our section.

Resolved further, That the president of the division is authorized and directed to wire Representative Livingston our support and thanks on this question, and also that the secretary be instructed to have copies of same sent to Representative Macon, of Arkansus, and to the Mississippi Senators and Representatives.

OFFICE OF SECRETARY TREASURER,
POINSETT COUNTY UNION, No. 71, F. E. AND C. U. OF A., Harrisburg, Ark.

RESOLUTIONS.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas a system of speculation exists, known as "gambling in futures," whereby a certain class of people control and manipulate the price of cotton and other farm products; and
Whereas were it not for the unfair operations of these professional gamblers the prices of farm products would be governed by the law of supply and demand, thus insuring to the producers a fair and just share of the value of his products instead of suffering the losses incurred by fictitious prices fixed months before the said products are marketed; and Whereas the Hon. Robert B. Macon, Representative from the First Congressional district of Arkansas, has introduced in the Congress of the United States a bill which seeks to abolish and prohibit so-called "bucket shops" and gambling in futures: Therefore, be it Resolved by Poinsett County Union, No. 71, of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America in convention assembled in Harrisburg, Ark., on January 5, 1907:

1. That we condemn in severest terms the system and practice of gambling in futures as being unfair, unjust, immoral, and a privilege that should not be permitted by the laws of Government and State.

2. That we heartly indorse the bill introduced by Congressman Macon to prohibit gambling in futures, and commend him for the loyal efforts he is exerting in behalf of the farmers' cause.

3. That we earnestly call upon all Senators and Congressmen who favor protecting the rights and interests of the producing classes of America to assist in the passage of this most wholesome and just law.

Resolved further, That we call upon farmers' organizations everywhere to adopt resolutions indorsing the aforementioned bill, and that a copy be furnished the Poinsett County Times and the Arkansas Union Tribune for publication.

Read and adopted this 5th day of January, 1907.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter included in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas is clearly new legislation and the point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Office of Chief of Weather Bureau: One Chief of Bureau, $5,000; one Assistant Chief of Bureau, $3,000; one chief clerk, $2,250; four chiefs of division, at $2,000 each, $8,000; one librarian and climatologist, $2,000; six clerks of class 4, $10,800; six clerks of class 3, $9,600; eighteen clerks of class 4, $10,800; six clerks of class 3, $9,600; eighteen clerks of class 2, $25,200; twenty-six clerks of class 1, $31,200; seventeen clerks, at $1,000 each, $17,000; nine clerks, at $900 each, $8,100; four copylsts or typewriters, at $840 each, $3,360; one copylst or typewriter, $720; two assistant foremen of division, at $1,600 each, $3,200; one proof reader, $1,400; one chief mechanic, $1,400; one lithographer, $1,300; three lithographers, at $1,200 each, $3,600; two pressmen, at $1,250 each, $2,500; ten compositors, at $1,250 each, $12,500; one skilled mechanic, $1,200; one capitain of the watch, $1,000; one electrician, $1,000; six skilled artisans, at $840 each, $5,040; three messengers or laborers, at $720 each, $3,600; three firemen, at $720 each, $2,160; three watchmen, at $720 each, $2,160; five folders and feeders, at $720 each, $3,600; three folders and feeders, at $720 each, $3,900; three folders and feeders, at $720 each, $3,900; three folders and feeders, at $600 each, $1,800; four messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $600 each, $7,800; four messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $450 each, $7,900; five messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $400 each, $7,900; one charwoman, $360; three charwomen, at $240 each, $7,900; one charwoman, $360; three charwomen, at $240 each, $7,900; five messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $450 each, $2,250; one charwoman, $360; three charwomen, at $240 each, $7,900; five messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $450 each, $2,250; one charwoman, $360; three charwomen, at $240 each, $7,900; five messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $450 each, $2,250; one charwoman, $360; three charwomen, at $240 each,

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the entire paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Which paragraph?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The paragraph beginning on page 4 and ending with line 13 on page 6, relating to the Weather Bureau.

Mr. Chairman, if the information generally given out by this Bureau is not more accurate than that given out relative to the weather conditions in Kansas, this Bureau is a wholly useless and even harmful department of the Government. A few days ago the Chief of this Bureau solemnly gave out to the country the information that weather conditions in Kansas had not changed within the last seventeen years. This misinformation was given to the country with all the authority of an official report. Now, as a matter of fact, there is not a farmer in Kansas, there is not a farmer's wife in the State who does not know more about the weather conditions in Kansas than the Chief of this Bureau if he has told all he knows about it. Why, Mr. Chairman, everybody who knows Kansas, who knows anything at all about the State and its present condition, knows that the velocity of the wind has materially decreased and that the rainfall has very materially increased within recent years. In all probability the gentleman in charge of this Bureau entertains the delusion about the weather in Kansas that is entertained about Kansas generally by people who have never been there. He no doubt has visions of the savages still roaming over the prairies of Kansas. He probably has visions of buffalo disporting themselves in the buffalo wallows of that great State. No doubt he thinks that we still have chinch bugs and grass-hoppers. He probably indulges in the delusion that we have absolutely nothing out there but hot winds, cyclones, and all that is native to the desert.

As a matter of fact, we have no more cyclones in Kansas than they have in Massachusetts, and we have as seasonable a rainfall, and have had for many years, as they have in any other of the midcontinent States of the Union. It is a slander upon the great State of Kansas to have a Government official publish solemnly to the world the statement that the conditions there have not changed in all the years, and that the wind still howls and blows there as it was originally supposed to do when the Government said that it was a part of the American Desert, and that the rainfall has not increased.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to ask the gentleman if they have any cyclone cellars in Kansas?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Why, there is another delusion. [Laughter.] There are no more cyclone cellars in Kansas than there are in Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I would like five minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas how he determines that the rainfall has increased in the way he states

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Aside from the fact that at our State university we have been making monthly tests for more than thirty years, showing that the rainfall has materially increased, the farmers out there know that there has been an increase in the rainfall, and I happen to know it myself. I had a letter from there this morning informing me that there has been an increase in the rainfall within the last ten days. [Laughter.] We get as much water in Kansas to-day, per capita, as they get anywhere else in the country.

Air. WADSWORTH. I suppose the gentleman from Kansas would be willing to exempt Kansas from the operation of the Weather Bureau?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the Weather Bureau is to give such reports as that recently given out by its Chief, I think that we would be very fortunate in being excepted from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Would not the gentleman from Kansas be willing to offer an amendment leaving the Weather Bureau in operation in the places where it is thought to be necessary, and excepting

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I feel sure that if this Chief of the Weather Bureau has the same misinformation about Illinois that he has about Kansas, the gentleman from Illinois would protest for Illinois.

Mr. MANN. But he has not. He has the right information We do not ask the gentleman from Kansas to about Illinois. instruct us whether he is right about Illinois, but we may be willing to take the opinion of the gentleman from Kansas as to the conditions in his own State. I suggest that he allow the Weather Bureau to operate in Illinois, where it is of great benefit, and provide that it shall not operate in Kansas, where, he says, it is of no value. Let him make that exception if he is sincere, and I would not doubt his sincerity for an instant.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from Illinois seems to think I am indulging in levity on this matter. As a matter of fact, the people of Kansas generally resent the recent statement of the Weather Bureau Chief as to weather conditions There is no man in that State but that has the highest opinion of the Agricultural Department of this Government, and no man in the State, including myself, would do injustice to the Chief of the Weather Bureau, and I would not take this opportunity to criticise him if he had not done the greatest possible injustice to the State of Kansas in his recent statement.

Mr. Chairman, I have made this motion for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the fact that official statements should not be made on misinformation, and the misinformation in this instance has been of great detriment to the people and State of Kansas.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that the gentleman Mr. MANN. from Kansas takes himself seriously on his motion. The Weather Bureau is probably one of the bureaus that does more good than any other bureau of the Government. I suspect, however, that there has been a change in weather conditions in Kansas since the distinguished gentleman from Pittsburg, Kans., came into existence and came into prominence. the sun shines less hotly in Kansas than it did before the smiling countenance of the gentleman from Pittsburg appeared on the scene. I presume the Chinook winds, as they start toward Kansas, draw back in dread, because they are afraid of facing the distinguished gentleman from Kansas. [Laughter.] Probably the hot winds and the arid lands out there feel that they should disappear while the fog and mists cloud the sun and pour rain water on the earth since the distinguished gentleman from Pittsburg, Kans., appeared on the horizon. Yet, with all due credit to the great abilities-and we all admire the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell]—and to the great influence of the gentleman over nature, there are some of us who are disinclined to take the opinion of the old housewives upon the subject of the effect of medicine instead of the scientist who has thoroughly investigated the subject.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I interrupt the gentleman? Mr. MANN. The gentleman may always interrupt me.

CAMPBELL of Kansas. Dr. F. H. Snow is no less a scientist than is the Chief of the Weather Bureau here in Washington, and he has kept a scientist's account of the weather in Kansas for more than thirty-odd years, and his observations are to the effect that the rainfall has very materially increased within these years and that the velocity of the winds has very materially decreased.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have already accounted for that, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No, no; the gentleman has not; and I may say to him that since my advent to Washington I have found the wind quite as vicious upon Pennsylvania avenue as it is upon Broadway, in Pittsburg, Kans.

Mr. MANN. I was just about to call the attention of the committee to the fact that so long as the distinguished gentleman from Pittsburg, Kans., remained in Kansas the sun refused to shine so hotly upon the arid regions, and the south winds refused to blow so warmly over the vegetation; but when the gentleman from Pittsburg, Kans., is translated from Kansas to the Halls of Congress, he is unable to exercise that controlling power, that careful consideration over the destinies of Kansas, and during his absence Kansas is in danger and needs the protecting care of the Weather Bureau. [Laughter.]

WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that there is no wind left either in Illinois or Kansas. [Laughter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected. Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentle-man from Kansas a question. I would like to know how the wind in this House compares with the wind in Kansas?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, Mr. Chairman, that question is irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas no longer has the floor. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, Weather Bureau: Stationery and blank books; furniture and repairs to same; freight and express charges; subsistence, care, and purchase of horses and vehicles for official purposes only, and for horse and carriage for use of Chief of Weather Bureau; repairs of harness; advertising, dry goods, twine, mats, olls, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, washing towels, and other miscellaneous supplies and expenses not otherwise provided for and necessary for the practical and efficient work of the Weather Bureau in the city of Washington, $10,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language in line 21, page 6, after the word "only,

"and for horse and carriage for the use of Chief of Weather Bureau." That is new legislation and is unauthorized by law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is well taken, and there are other points of order that can be raised against legislation in this bill. I simply want to say with reference to all of them that they have all received, I may say, the unanimous support of the Committee on Agriculture, and the Department of Agriculture has been built up to its present efficiency by legislation on this appropriation bill. If we had waited the slow progress of special bills for each single object sought very little would have been accomplished, and I simply want to call the attention of the House to that fact, and reiterate that there has never been any legislation on this bill by the committee that did not meet the unanimous support of that committee and was not for the good interest of that great Department.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not make this point of order in any spirit of criticism of the Committee on Agriculture. I do it more as a matter of self-protection. Members of this House, at least some of them, will recall a very excited debate some years ago on the subject of the abuses that had grown up here in Washington with respect to the use of carriages by subordinate officers.

If we give to the Chief of the Weather Bureau a horse and carriage, as here proposed, the Chief of the Bureau of Standards, who is farther removed from the Capitol than is the Chief of the Weather Bureau, will of course come to the Committee on Appropriations in the next session and say that we have given this to the Chief of the Weather Bureau and that he wants a horse and carriage for his convenience. So that in a short time we will have the same practice, the same abuses that we complained of before and which Congress checked when it put a stop to the appropriation of money for the purchase and maintenance of horses and carriages for private use. that reason, Mr. Chairman, that I have made the point of order, and not by way of criticism of the committee at all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question, if he will recognize me for that purpose. Does the chief of the Government Printing Office, or by whatever title he may be known, have a carriage?

Mr. TAWNEY. He has an official carriage for official pur-

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then the proposition that was made to Members that he would be glad to have us call and see him and ride in a carriage to and from is an exhibition of his own personal generosity to Members of the House?

Why, he has a dozen carriages up Mr. CRUMPACKER. there.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio the Government Printer has a number of carriages, but he has no carriage that is not used for official purposes that is maintained at the expense of the Government.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then the proposition involves simply a deflection of the Government carriage from its ordinary pur-

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I do not know anything about that, but the gentleman from Ohio knows very well the abuses that existed in the Departments which only a few years ago we remedied by legislation, and if the gentleman will take the estimates which come from the Departments every year he would see that every Department recommends a repeal of this legislation in order that the heads of the Bureaus can have the benefit of free carriages and free horses for their private as well as official

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want the gentleman to understand I am not serious about anything except the inquiry about where these carriages were to come from. That is all I wanted to

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. I would like to be heard on the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the point of order is good. The Weather Bureau is created under an act of Congress. We all know, as a matter of fact, that under the operations of the Weather Bureau and under act of Congress it is absolutely essential that the collection of information upon which prognostications are made is made in the nighttime.

Mr. SOUTHARD. But they are not made by a horse and carriage.

Mr. MANN. They are made in the nighttime, and you might as well say it would not be correct to provide fuel at a station or light at a station. It is absolutely necessary in the conduct of business that some things should be appropriated. We can not say in an appropriation bill all the things that are necessary in connection with the office work; and if it is in the power of the Chief of the Weather Bureau to provide a central station to which he may be called or is called in the early hours of the morning, and where he must be without facilities to get away from, with no provision made for his sleeping there, with no home provided for him by the Government, I say it is fully within the power of Congress in connection with the work under the direct scope of the original act to provide him the means of getting from and to that place.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Has the gentleman here any informa-tion that the Chief of the Weather Bureau goes cut there at might to take observations or conduct operations of that kind?

Mr. MANN. Why, Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the question of the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.] The Chief of the Weather Bureau of course is often at the chief weather office at night, and it is absolutely necessary that he have a horse and carriage as far as he is concerned. The only question is whether the Government shall afford him one or whether he shall be required to employ his own horse and car-Now, it being something that it is necessary for him to do, it being something that the Government requires him to do, I think the Government, so far as the point of order is concerned, is able to furnish him the facilities.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me state to the gentleman that if he will go to line 20 of the same paragraph he will see "subsistence, care, and purchase of horses and vehicles for official purposes only."

Mr. MANN. I am talking about the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Comptroller has ruled that he can not ride in it himself either from the Department to his house or from the house to the Department.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the ruling of the Comptroller.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon—
Mr. LAMB. That was stated before the committee by the Chief of the Weather Bureau himself.

The Comptroller would properly rule he can not Mr. MANN. use a horse and carriage except for official purposes, for official But this appropriation is not for the personal use of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, and if we have the power to appropriate in the bill for horses and carriages for official use of the Department, we have the power to say that one of those horses and carriages shall be for the official use of the Chief of the Weather Bureau.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, it is very evident that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has a different idea from that entertained by most of us of what this reform that we are talking about is or ought to be. I presume very likely observations are taken at the Weather Bureau in the nighttime, but they are taken by men who are stationed there for that purpose. They are taken in the regular and orderly course of business, and they are taken daily or nightly at stated times. They will be taken in the same manner whether this horse and carriage is furnished or not. Men are empoyed to do that work. doubtless live near where their work is done, and this horse and buggy or wagon or whatever it may be will serve no purpose except a private purpose—that is, the one that will be denied by this point of order if the point of order is sustained. All it will accomplish is this: It will prevent the Chief of the Weather Bureau from having a horse and carriage for his private use. Now, as has already been stated, I have no objection to it, but if he is to have a horse and carriage, in justice to the Director of the Bureau of Standards, whose place of business is farther removed from the center of the city than is that of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, the Director of the Bureau of Standards should have one also. And there are other heads of Bureaus in the Departments who should be provided with horses and carriages in the same way. Now, the proposition is perfectly plain. If this horse and carriage is to be provided to the Chief of the Weather Bureau, it ought to be provided for others. It is not for official purposes that it is desired—and I suppose that I am speaking to the point of order-and, not being for official purposes, there is no authority for it unless the authority is given, and to provide for it in this legislative bill will be new legislation.

Mr. SCOTT. If the facts were as stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Southard] the committee would not be warranted in bringing in this item, and the Chair would, of course, be warranted in ruling it out in consonance with the point of order. But the gentleman is mistaken in his statement of facts. The truth of the matter is that the Chief of the Weather Bureau is on duty twenty-four hours in every day. That does not mean that he must be at his desk twenty-four hours, but it does mean that he is likely to be summoned to the Bureau at any time within the twenty-four hours. He is likely to have a call at his home or at the opera or wherever he may be at any time in the night to go to the Bureau in order to give his expert counsel in connection with some extraordinary weather condition that may have arisen somewhere in the country. Further than that, in the absence of the Secretary and Assistant Secretary of Agriculture he is the Acting Secretary. The Weather Bureau is 2 miles from the Department of Agriculture. It is frequently necessary for him to make official trips between those two places. When he is summoned from his home-he lives at a distance from the street car lines and about three-quarters of a mile from the Weather Bureau-it is a difficult and tedious matter for him to reach the Weather Bureau by means of public transportation.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Can the gentleman suggest a phenomenon which would cause him to be called to the Agricultural Department? I only ask——

Mr. SCOTT. I did not hear the gentleman's question.
Mr. SOUTHARD. Could he suggest a phenomenon which would be likely to call him from his place of business or observatory to the Agricultural Department? I would like to know how frequently such a thing would occur.

Mr. SCOTT. Not to the Agricultural Department, except in the absence of the Secretary and Assistant Secretary, at which time he would be acting chief, necessarily spending a part of his time there and part of his time at the Weather Bureau.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Would he use this horse and wagon to visit the Agricultural Department?

Mr. SCOTT. I think so; as it is a distance of 2 miles from his own Bureau.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the remarks of the gentlemen are on the merits of the question and not on the merits of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen will confine their remarks on the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. I have only one word further to say in connection with the point of order. The language contained in last year's bill was believed by the committee and was intended by the committee to authorize the employment of a carriage for the use of the Chief of this Bureau. It was ruled, however, by the Comptroller of the Treasury that it did not confer such authority, and it was for the purpose of meeting that ruling the language of the present bill was introduced.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. TAWNEY. A parliamentary Inquiry. Has the point of order been sustained?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet ruled.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak upon the point of order. I invite the Chair's attention to the phraseology of the clause, the last part of which the point of order was made against. The clause is "subsistence, care, and purchase of horses and vehicles for official purposes only, and for horse and carriage for use of Chief of Weather Bureau."

reading the clause together the only interpretation that can be placed upon it is that the horse and carriage for the use of Chief of Weather Bureau is not to be used necessarily for official purposes, because there is authority in the first part of the clause to purchase all the horses and carriages that may be necessary for official purposes, and that would include all official use of the Chief of the Bureau that may be necessary; and any court or any administrative officer would construe the last provision not confined to official use, but to include private and personal use of the Chief of the Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, station employees, Weather Bureau: Professors of meteorology, inspectors, district forecasters, local forecasters, section directors, research observers, observers, assistant observers, operators, repair men, station agents, messengers, messenger boys, laborers, and other necessary employees, for duty in the United States, in the West Indies or on adjacent coasts, in the Hawaiian Islands, and in Bermuda, and the employees of the Weather Bureau outside of the city of Washington, may hereafter, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, without additional expense to the Government, be granted leave of absence not to exceed fifteen days in any one year, which leave may in exceptional and meritorious cases where such an employee is ill, see extended in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, not to exceed fifteen days additional in any one year, $551,550.

Mr. SCOTT. I move to strike out the last word. I offer this

Mr. SCOTT. I move to strike out the last word. I offer this pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of answering authoritatively a question which was put to me during the discussion yesterday, to which I gave at that time a conjectural reply. I will ask that the letter which I hold in my hand be read from the desk in my time. Before it is read, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say, by way of introduction, that during the discussion yesterday the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rhodes] asked me why the special appropriation of $5,000 which was carried in last year's bill for work in combating orchard diseases in the Ozark regions of Missouri and Arkansas had not been carried into effect. He said he had received information that no work had been done. I replied at that time that, without having any personal knowledge of the matter, I felt confident he would discover upon inquiry of the Department that the work had been done or would be done; and to show that this conjecture was correct I will ask the Clerk to read the letter which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1907.

Hon. C. F. Scott, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Scott: In the discussion which took place yesterday upon the appropriation bill for this Department I notice a statement was made that not one cent of the $5,000 which the Department was directed to spend in connection with the fruit work in the Ozark region had been spent. This item was put in the appropriation bill last year by Mr. Murphy, of Missouri. The gentleman who made the statement yesterday was evidently misinformed, as we have already expended a larger part of this amount, and before the present season is closed we shall expend more than the $5,000, drawing the additional funds from the special allotment for fruit diseases.

The past season's work is completed, and we now have in the hands of the printer a farmers' bulletin giving details of the investigations, results secured, etc. The work will go on this spring, and by the 1st of July we shall probably have expended two or three thousand dollars more than the $5,000 item inserted in the bill. This, as you know, we have authority to do under the general clause directing us to investigate and treat fruit diseases throughout the country.

Very sincerely, yours,

B. T. Galloway, Chief of Burcau.

B. T. GALLOWAY, Chief of Burcau.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have before me some advance sheets of the bulletin referred to in Doctor Galloway's letter. From those I find that the work in Arkansas was conducted at Bentonville and vicinity in the orchards of Mr. H. W. Gipple, Capt. George T. Lincoln, and Doctor Alden. In Missouri the work was conducted in the orchard of Fassnacht Brothers at Springfield and that of Mr. J. E. Hansell at Fordland.

I have in my hand also a letter from the manager of the Missouri State Fruit Experiment Station, Mountain Grove, Mo., dated April 26, 1906, in which statements are made to the effect that the station will cooperate with the Department of Agriculture in undertaking the work proposed. I also have the report made by the gentleman who had immediate charge of the work, setting forth the progress that had been made at the date of his letter, which was September 21, 1906. I have also a letter from Senator Berry, of Arkansas, to Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, speaking of this special work, highly commending it, and inclosing resolutions, which I will ask the indulgence of the House to permit me to read.

Resolutions adopted by the Benton County Horticultural Society at its regular meeting, November 3, 1906, at Bentonville, Ark.

Whereas because of the inestimable value of the pathological work done in Benton County and northwest Arkansas by the Department of Agriculture, through its representatives, Messrs. Scott and Rorer: Be it, therefore,

Resolved, That in acknowledgment of the services rendered, we, members of the Benton County Horticultural Society, do express our sincere thanks to the honorable Secretary of Agriculture and the heads of various departments who have shown us such kindly interest; and, be it further Resolved, That Messrs, W. M. Scott and J. B. Rorer be elected honorary members of the Benton County Horticultural Society; and that these acknowledgments be duly transmitted to the Agricultural Department.

H. W. GIPPLE, President, I. B. LAWTON, Secretary.

These letters, reports, and resolutions would seem to make it certain that the work authorized by the special appropriation has been done and done to the entire satisfaction of the people most concerned. I have presented them at this time because I thought the House would be glad to learn the actual facts in connection with this work.

Mr. FLOYD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a state-

Mr. SCOTT. For a question, certainly.

Mr. FLOYD. I desire to state that I live in the district affected, and I desire to say that I was present at the horticultural society's meeting and that I know from the fruit growers that the work done by the Agricultural Department in that respect is universally commended by the people of that section and is highly beneficial to the fruit interests.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the next time they have the matter up they might refer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Murphy] who brought up this investigation.

Mr. SCOTT. I will say, in reply to that, Mr. MURPHY is from Missouri, and the resolutions which I have referred to came from societies in Arkansas, with which it is entirely natural he should not be in touch.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Buildings, Weather Bureau: For the purchase of sites and the erection of not more than five buildings for use as Weather Bureau observatories, and for all necessary labor, materials, and expenses, plans and specifications to be prepared and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, and work done under the supervision of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, including the purchase of instruments, furniture, supplies, flagstaffs, and storm-warning towers to properly equip these stations: Provided, That if any of the money for these several buildings remains unexpended for the special purposes for which it is appropriated, so much of it as is necessary may be expended for the repair, improvement, and equipment of any other buildings or grounds owned by the Government and occupied by the Weather Bureau outside of the District of Columbia, $53,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a point of order against the paragraph just read, beginning with line 24.

order against the paragraph just read, beginning with line 24, page 8, and ending with line 13, page 9, on the ground that it is new legislation and not authorized to be inserted in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes a point of order against the whole paragraph?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.
Mr. PERKINS. I do not make this point of order in any captious spirit, but I can not understand this provision of the bill and its history. Last year the appropriation bill contained a provision which was precisely the same, word for word, appropriating the sum of $53,500, I think, for five new buildings.

I take it, Mr. Chairman, that the rule is familiar that this appropriation for the purchase of sites and for the erection on the sites of five new buildings is subject to a point of order. That has been held repeatedly in reference to bills of this kind. What fills me with surprise and leads me to make this point of order is that for several years to my knowledge, and for many years more, I dare say, there has been this same provision for five new buildings for the use of the Weather Bureau. Perhaps the chairman of the committee can explain this, but I confess I can not understand the provision, or why we should be asked year after year to buy five additional buildings for this Bureau.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman I want to say that this represents what might fairly be man I want to say that this represents what the limit was termed the improvement of the Weather Bureau plant. We termed the improvement of the Weather Bureau plant. In a are renting offices in a great many places at high rent. great many other places we have shanties out on the plains or on the Lakes, and every year for the last five or six years we have allowed the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Chief of the Weather Bureau, to improve that service by purchasing sites and putting up new buildings at moderate cost. I believe this simply represents the legitimate improvement in the plant of the Bureau.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? For how many years have these appropriations been made?

Mr. WADSWORTH. For at least three or four years. They represent an authorization in all to buy ten or fifteen sites and to erect ten or fifteen buildings.

Mr. PERKINS. If the thing was done intelligently, why should not the committee make one appropriation for all the buildings required for the Weather Bureau and have done

Mr. WADSWORTH. Because it could not be done wisely and judiciously all in one year. Sometimes the Chief of this Bureau has only built three or four buildings out of this appropriation. I would think it very unwise to give him four or five hundred thousand dollars in a lump sum and let him go on and erect buildings in different parts of the country ad libitum.

Mr. PERKINS. If only three or four additional buildings are required, why does the committee make a larger appropria-tion than is necessary? In other words, has not this come to be a standing appropriation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not necessarily. Mr. PERKINS. Continued year after year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It simply represents the improvement of the plant of the Weather Bureau.

Mr. PERKINS. Year after year the same appropriation of the same amount is made for the same number of buildings.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the cost of five buildings was arrived at at the time this appropriation was first made, amounting to $53,000. It is rather arbitrary, I confess, and if the gentleman wants to fix it at an even figure, $50,000 or $60,000, I do not think the committee would object.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask for information why the same appropriation of this same amount is made year after year? The question is as to whether this particular item is investigated by the committee each year, or whether it has become a standing appropriation. Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; in the hearings it has been the custom of the committee to inquire what use has been made of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LAWRENCE). The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he contends that there is legislation on our statute books authorizing the erection of five buildings?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The legislation establishing the Signal Service, which is the foundation of the Weather Bureau. We passed the organic law establishing the Signal Service, which was afterwards absorbed by the Weather Bureau, and I think that organic law gives us that right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to a ruling made in the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress

The ruling I refer to is on page 349 of the Manual, where an appropriation for Weather Bureau observatories was held not to be a continuation of a public work or object. Has there been any legislation since that first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not recall any special legislation, only legislation contained in appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York call the Chair's attention directly to the legislation which he thinks authorizes this appropriation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The organic law establishing the Weather Bureau I think the Chair will find gives certain broad general powers

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman give the year when the organic law was passed?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, I have the law here, and it is dated October 1, 1890, and reads as follows:

That the civilian duties now performed by the Signal Corps of the Army shall hereafter devolve upon a bureau to be know as the "Weather Bureau," which, on and after July 1, 1891, shall be established in and attached to the Department of Agriculture, and the Signal Corps of the Army shall remain a part of the military establishment under the direction of the Secretary of War, and all estimates for its support shall be included with other estimates for the support of the military establishment.

SEC. 3. That the Chief of the Weather Bureau, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, on and after July 1, 1891, shall have charge of the forecasting of weather, the issue of storm warnings, the display of weather and flood signals for the benefit of agriculture, commerce and navigation, the gauging and reporting of rivers, the maintenance and operation of seacoast telegraph lines, and the collection and transmission of marine intelligence for the benefit of commerce and navigation, the reporting of temperature and rainfall conditions for the cotton interests, the display of frost and cold wave signals, the distribution of meteorological information in the interests of agriculture and commerce, and the taking of such meteorological observations as may be necessary to establish and record the climatic conditions of the United States, or as are essential for the proper execution of the foregoing duties. duties.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is what I referred to. Under these broad powers the building of observatories for taking observations is provided for.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks he should follow the ruling made in the Fifty-seventh Congress—that there is no authority in law to appropriate for these observatories. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Weather Bureau, $1,466,540.

WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, let the Clerk correct the total, leaving out $53,000, which has just been struck out.

The CHAIRMAN. The total will be corrected. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, also, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend $5,000 of the amount hereby appropriated to especially investigate hemorrhagic septicæmia, infectious cerebro-spinal meningitis, and malignant catarrh, prevalent among domestic animals in the State of Minnesota and adjoining States, to work out, if possible, in cooperation with the Minnesota Experiment Station, the problem of prevention by developing autitoxin or preventive vaccines and to secure and diffuse information along these lines: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase in the open market samples of all tuberculin serums, antitoxins, or analogous products, of foreign or domestic manufacture, which are sold in the United States for the detection, prevention, treatment, or cure of diseases of domestic animals, to test the same and to publish the results of said tests in such manner as he may deem best.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman. I move to strike out the

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order that I may ask the gentleman in reference to this provision. I see that for two years, certainly, and, I think, for several years, there has been carried an appropriation for the expenditure of $5,000 to investigate, in cooperation with the Minnesota Experiment Station, certain things there specified.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was carried by the bill last year for the first time. It does not increase the appropriation; it simply sets aside $5,000 of the lump sum of the appropriation to investigate this special trouble in Minnesota. I would like to have the gentleman from Minnesota, a member of the committee, heard on that matter, because he is more familiar with it than any other member of the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. What I would like to suggest is that there are many items in this bill, and it is so in other bills, that get in once for some special investigation, and then year after year go on and go on and become a permanent part of the expenditures of the Government. If there is a special investigation in connection with the Minnesota Experiment Station perhaps it is proper enough if it is to be done and then be done. But if in the future it is to run along indefinitely, I think we ought to raise the point of order and get rid of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no intention, I think, in the present committee at least, to allow it to continue indefinitely. It is a good deal like the appropriation to examine the scab in orchards of the Ozark region, to which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scott] called attention a short time ago. That work is finished, and that appropriation will be done away with. When this special work is finished we will not be troubled with it further

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman must admit that in this bill there is a large amount of appropriations for special investigations which we have been carrying for years, and apparently are no nearer the end than they were in the beginning.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My answer to that is that the large appropriations are for scientific investigation generally, and appropriations are for scientific investigation generally, according to my experience, never end, but they are always finding out something new, something interesting, something valuable to the country of the

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know of the gentleman whether he thinks this experiment in cooperation with the Minnesota Experiment Station is to be one of these scientific investigations that will go on forever?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I do not think so. I think perhaps the appropriation here made ought to wind it up. I think the committee has been very careful about that. It has avoided to the very limit all special appropriations. It has yielded now and then, I admit.

Mr. PERKINS. I have great confidence in the chairman of the committee, but I know the demands in behalf of science are very strenuous.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in my own time I would like to explain just a few moments for the benefit of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Perkins]. We have in Minnesota an experiment station which I do not think is excelled by any other State in the Union, as we are, to a certain extent, pioneers on the subject of agricultural colleges and experiment stations. We have a very finely equipped institution along that line. During the past six or seven years, however, a certain disease of the kind specified in this particular paragraph has to a certain extent been prevalent in certain portions of Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, and the two Dakotas. We have been en-deavoring with the material at our command to find some antitoxine or some remedy for this disease. The matter was presented to Secretary Wilson two years ago, and particularly to the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Hayes, who knew particularly of the accommodation for handling a matter of this kind in Minnesota. It was especially urged that a definite amount be set aside, and particularly $5,000, in order that the Department here at Washington might send special bacteriologists to Minnesota to cooperate with our institution for the purposes of discovering a remedy, if possible, for this disease, which has become quite prevalent and is causing great disaster to horses and cattle in the territory that I have mentioned. sider that it is very material, and it can be handled better from the station at Minnesota than any other locality.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Have they discovered any remedy for the disease? Are they any further along than they were two years

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would say that the appropriation made two years ago-

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; only one year ago.
Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The appropriation was made last year and was not available until after the season, I might say, for swamp fever and septicema was prevalent. The Department of Agriculture has sent a scientist there for the purpose, and they now have quite a number of animals in the Departments for use to experiment with.

Mr. PERKINS. I have no doubt they have plenty of animals, The question is whether or not they have discovered any remedies for the disease.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have not as yet, but we have the animals, and we are now experimenting on them for that Mr. PERKINS. They have the sick animals, but they have as yet no remedy?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I understand that it is somewhat difficult from, say, the latter part of October of last year until this time to discover a remedy for a disease of this nature.

Mr. PERKINS. How long have the scientific men in Minnesota been endeavoring to discover remedies for this disease?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not, particularly as to these two diseases, more than two years. They have sent in some valuable information to the headquarters here in Washington, but desire material aid from the Bureau here at Washington to continue this investigation.

Mr. PERKINS. How many years does the gentleman think we will have to carry this appropriation before as a result of all this scientific investigation a remedy is discovered?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman has asked me a question that I am unable to answer. I will state, however, that we will not carry it any longer than the Secretary of Agriculture deems it wise and expedient; and if the remedy is discovered and the disease stamped out, then and in such case the whole expense will be stopped. If, however, the Secretary of Agriculture deems it advisable in the future to continue this work longer than the present appropriation, I for one would advocate it being done. I do not think it will take longer to stamp it out than it did to stamp out the so-called "rinderpest" in New York. I do not know how long that took, but I am informed it took quite a series of years and a great many thousand dollars more than we ever expect to ask.

Mr. PERKINS. I imagine that it stamped out itself and died out, as most diseases do at the last.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. How much did it cost the Govern-

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, I do not know.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I notice on line 11, page 11, the appropriation has been increased from $837,200 to $897,200—that is, it has been increased $60,000 over last year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. Do you desire to know the object

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Yes; I want to ask the chairman of the committee what the estimate of the Secretary of Agriculture was for the purpose for which this money is appro-

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have allowed an increase of $60,000 over last year to provide for the reconstruction and repairs of buildings at quarantine stations, Bethesda, Baltimore, and other places where those repairs were necessary. There was an estimate of appropriation of $20,000 asked for to buy additional land at Bethesda, and that the committee refused; so that the $60,000 practically represents the cost of repairs of buildings on the several quarantine stations over the country. There is one at Baltimore, one at Boston, one at New York, and I think there is one at New Orleans and one at San Francisco. These buildings, let me say, are necessarily short lived, as they are of a very cheap kind and do not last long.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Then the amount appropriated this year gives the Secretary of Agriculture all he asked for

Mr. WADSWORTH. Except for the purchase of some land at Bethesda. We thought it inadvisable to buy land at two or three hundred dollars an acre for the purpose of raising a few more crops to feed the animals there under experiment, and we thought it wiser to go in the open market and buy their fodder as it was needed.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this information not for the purpose of objecting to the increased appropriation, but to make sure that an appropriation had been allowed which was liberal enough for the purpose required.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

For experiments in animal breeding and feeding in cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations, $50,000: Provided, That of said sum $25,000 shall be apportioned and allotted by the Secretary of Agriculture in such amounts as he may determine, not to exceed $7,500 to any one State or Territory, for use in experiments in developing types of horses hardier, more resistant to disease, and better suited to climatic conditions, promoting thereby the interests of agriculture in the United States, in such only of the several States and Territories as shall, prior to the 1st day of July, 1907, appropriate a like amount to that to be secured hereunder for the same purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY Mr. Chairman I desire to reserve the point

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order on this paragraph.

Mr. PERKINS. I rise, Mr. Chairman, to make the point of order against the paragraph and especially against the proviso beginning in line 6 and running to line 16.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I will turn this matter over to my friend from Colorado [Mr. Brooks].

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York-I did not quite catch his point of order. As I understand it was made to the proviso.

Mr. PERKINS. To the whole section also, but I will state to the gentleman from Colorado I have no desire to object captiously to any proper investigation by the Agricultural Department, but to the proviso of making horses hardier. If you are going to start in with that, you will have experiments involving vast sums of money, running over generations of horses, and to make an appropriation for a few years of $25,000 a year to make horses hardier I must say does not at all commend itself to anyone who knows what is required for the development and breeding and production of horses.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, do I understand, therefore, that the point of order lies to the whole paragraph or to the proviso?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands it relates to the proviso.

Mr. PERKINS. No. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is also to the whole paragraph.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Well, Mr. Chairman, although the point of order may extend to the proviso, it certainly should not extend to the whole paragraph, and therefore, indeed, to the appropriation for experiments in feeding and breeding, to which it certainly can not lie. These experiments are covered by and within the purview of the laws governing the organization of the Agricultural Department in four specific particulars. In the first place, the general law incorporating the office of the Commissioner of Agriculture specifically recognizes the jurisdiction of the Department over subjects allied to agriculture in the widest and most general and most comprehensive sense of the term.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Colorado to the fact that if part of a paragraph is out of order the whole is out of order.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I quite understand that proposition, but in order to show that the proviso is in order the whole paragraph logically must be in order. My contention is that the original appropriation is in order, because it is within the scope of the law incorporating the Department, because it is within the scope of the law organizing the Bureau of Animal Industry, because it is within the scope of the law establishing the agricultural colleges, and particularly the law authorizing the Government to contribute to the support of the experimental stations. From each one of those four acts

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Brooks] permit a question?
Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I will.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the act creating the Department of Agriculture or the acts authorizing Congress to appropriate for the support of the State experimental stations authorize the distribution of money to the States, as you here propose?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. The laws authorizing contributions to the agricultural colleges do so by inference, but I am not discussing that phase of the proposition now. The propesition that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] raises is a different one, and that is a question of the limitation. so far as the work of the experiments in feeding and breeding, which have gone on for years, is concerned, that certainly There are to-day, as the hearings show, is a continuing work. two experiments now in operation where the Government has its own plant, its own stock, and is developing its own work.

Now, if it be in order to carry on these experiments in feeding and breeding, it certainly is in order to say that those experiments shall be devoted either to horses or cattle or any other domestic animals. That carries us by the first portion of the section, beyond the proviso. If it be in order to direct these experiments to feeding and breeding of horses, then the question comes up on the limitation, and that is the question which both the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] have raised. And I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the precedents are very clear that if the Government can appropriate a specific sum for a specific purpose it can say that that sum shall not be used for another purpose.

I do not care to take the time of the Chair unduly, but there are two decisions that I would like to have the Chair consider. The whole question was considered in the Fifty-fourth Congress, with Mr. Reagan in the chair, and the proposition was thor-oughly established by the precedents then cited that where the Congress had the power to extend its benefits to a class it had the right to say that the members of that class should qualify themselves in a specific particular. There the question arose on a pension bill, and the decisions then quoted established the proposition that the Congress could say, even on an appropria-tion bill, that those who sought to avail themselves of appropriations by Congress could well be held and required to come within certain provisions; so Congress in appropriating for the States can well say that only those States which are complying with certain antecedent requirements shall be benefited. And there is a very recent decision of Mr. Burton of Ohio, in the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, where the Chair held that on a provision like this:

Provided, That one half of any sum or sums retained by said Homes on account of pensions received shall be taken from the sum therein

And the Chair in quite an elaborate argument held that that was simply providing that those who sought to avail themselves of the provision could be required to come within the class

In the same way, away back much further, Mr. Reagan, of Texas, sustained the same proposition, where the proviso was as Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes of larger denominations in lieu of notes of smaller denominations.

In other words, where the proviso is simply that certain antecedent requirements shall be exacted, the Congress has the power to make such requirements, and that is all that this provision does. It is within the power of Congress to appropriate for experiments in cooperation with the agricultural experiment stations, and it is within the power of Congress to say that those appropriations shall be for a legitimate limited purpose, under the organic act—for instance, breeding With those two propositions conceded, it follows inevitably that Congress can say that only those States that comply with the antecedent requirements or limitation shall be entitled to the benefit of the act. Now, one word as to the purpose. The appropriation is designed simply to force a reasonable and rational degree of cooperation from the States and communities benefited. The committee thought that if the Government was to aid these experiments then it was no more than proper, it was no more than right, that the States should aid in the work contemplated, and the States where these experiments are now under contemplation and where they are going on have contributed and are cooperating very liberally. I think it would be a very unfortunate thing, and not at all in the line of good legislation, if this reasonable limitation and requirement should be stricken out.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Colorado permit a question?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. By this proviso he concedes that it is competent for the States to do this work, because it withholds any Federal aid until they have appropriated from their own treasury a certain amount of money which is to be expended for the accomplishment of this purpose.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Naturally the States can do what they want to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not therefore necessarily a State func-

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Not at all exclusively.

Mr. TAWNEY. In what respect is it not exclusively a State

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. It is entirely a function of the Government, because it is a function of the Government to develop the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. TAWNEY. But it is not the right nor duty of the Federal Government to enter into copartnership with the States.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. But it is the right and duty of the Government to cooperate with the State experiment stations, and when we so cooperate we can specify how this right and duty of the National Government to cooperate with the experi-ment stations shall be exercised. The express right is given to operate experimental farms-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question, for information purely, about the interpreta-tion of this proviso? Does it contemplate that the Secretary of Agriculture shall conduct an experiment, using the allotment he shall make to the station in connection with a State appropriation, or is it to turn the allotment over to the State authorities to conduct the experiment?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Oh, no; that construction could not be supported.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman's understanding is that the experiment shall be made by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Exactly. Mr. CRUMPACKER. And that makes an allotment to the State upon the condition that the State makes an appropriation of a similar amount for that use? Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. For the same purpose, through the experiment station.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. To be put under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture?
Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Exactly.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Certainly.
Mr. PERKINS. I wish he would tell us in what practical way he expects these tests are to be carried on by which we are to develop a hardier breed of horses. Is the Government going to have a large stud established in each State wherein to breed horses and keep them for a long period of years from the time they are colts in order to ascertain results?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. To some extent.

Mr. PERKINS. How far does the gentleman think $7,500 would go in carrying on an extensive experiment in any of the United States to breed a hardier race of horses?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I do not think that $25,000 would go very far at all, but I think that $75,000, with what we have already expended, would enable the Government to carry on, as it is now carrying on, these experiments, and that they would be of great value to the agricultural interests of this country.

Mr. PERKINS. How much does the gentleman think we would have to pay for stallions that would develop a hardier race of horses?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. The Government purchased a horse two years ago, which breeders say is one of the finest specimens in the United States, for $3,500.

Mr. PERKINS. And that was one horse at one place?
Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. The entire cost of stock for the larger, the major, experiment thus far has been a little over $10,000.

Mr PERKINS. Do you think you are going very far in the development of a hardier race of horses for $10,000?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I think we shall be enabled to establish certain general principles and to work to a type. I think that is entirely feasible.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman really think the development of a superior type of animal like the horse could be accomplished by the appropriation of $7,500 or $25,000? it not be hundreds of thousands of dollars carried through many years?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I will reply to the gentleman by saying that the English Government has in the past twenty years greatly improved the types of horses at a less expense than I will say further that since the appropriation has been made and since this work has been initiated the Canadian government has started upon the same work; and I will also further say that the government of the Duchy of Oldenburg, the Russian Government, and the French Government, and the Austrian Government have all been carrying on similar experiments, and we are lagging very far behind them in what we are doing.

Mr. PERKINS. The great development of high-grade horses in England has been the result of generations of experiment by the owners of race horses, and of the great studs and stables there, and the breeding of cavalry horses. If we are going to undertake that, we have a big job before us.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. The royal live stock commission does not agree with the gentleman. It says that the work of the Government has been of priceless benefit to the interests of England.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Foster of Vermont). The Chair is prepared to rule. In the opinion of the Chair, the proviso is clearly subject to the point of order, and as the point of order is made to the whole paragraph, the Chair sustains it as to the whole paragraph.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Does the ruling of the Chair eliminate the entire paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the point of order was made against the paragraph, and it is sustained against the paragraph, on the ground that a portion of it is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert a new paragraph to read as follows:

"For experiments in animal feeding and breeding, in cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations, $50,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order, and desire to ask the gentleman a question. This is simply reenacting the language of this paragraph down to the proviso?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Without the proviso.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then what is the necessity of increasing the appropriation?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Because the work is growing, and it is required for these experiments that there be for this year quite an additional expense.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will not make a point of order against the paragraph, but I will move to amend, reducing the appropriation to $25,000 instead of $50,000.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I should like to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty-five."

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. I liope the gentleman from Minnesota will not insist on his motion. The appropriation is small enough anyway.

Mr. Chairman, under this little appropriation of $25,000 the Government is to-day carrying on experiments in some eight different States. The result, therefore, is that the amount apportioned to any one State is so very small that it is impossible to do anything in a systematic way, and the condition of the experiments in Vermont and the experiments in Colorado is such that there is urgently needed and required this year a considerable additional sum. It will not be required every year, but it is required this year. These experiments soon ought to be mainly self-sustaining, and, in the opinion of the Department of Agriculture, they will be.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Department estimated only $25,000 for this service, did it not?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. That is true, but the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry came before the committee and said that if the work was to proceed, they urgently needed more money, and he strongly favored the increased appropriation, The Secretary of Agriculture in personal conversation said this same thing. The Assistant Secretary said the same thing. This little appropriation, spread over eight States, is so small that it really can amount to but little. Now, the condition of the experiments requires some new stock; not very much, but some. After this year it ought to be easily possible to conduct these experiments with the $25,000, but not this year. Therefore I earnestly hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will not prevail. It will hinder, curtail, and limit the work very seriously.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering the amendment was to keep the appropriation within the amount estimated by the Department to be necessary during the next fiscal year for this service authorized by the previous appropriation act; and I am informed that it was understood among the members of the committee that if the proviso went out the amount should be reduced to $25,000, which is the current appro-

I do not wish to be understood as trying to cripple this service in the least, but when the Department makes its estimate as to how much is necessary for a given service, you can always depend upon the amount being sufficient for that service. They rarely ever, unless there is a blunder made, underestimate the amount to be expended in the next fiscal year. When the proviso which necessitated the increase to $50,000 had gone out there is no longer necessity for the full amount asked for.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, there certainly was no such understanding, and the facts would show the contrary. If it was necessary to have the proviso to enable and compel the States to cooperate in order to make an adequate appropriation, then much more would it be necessary to have some increase if the States did not contribute. If the States contributed the total amount would be $75,000; if the States did not contribute, it would be only $50,000. If the whole proviso is stricken out and also the increase, it leaves only $25,000, or one-third of the amount the Department thinks is necessary to appropriate for this work. It is absolutely absurd that there could have been any such understanding. What we are working for is to enable us to do systematic work, and if you take away the provision making the States contribute and take away the $25,000, you leave us utterly unable to cope with the work. The appropriation is, as I have said, spread over eight States, and it is much too small, and I hope the committee will not agree to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For meat inspection: That hereafter, for the purpose of preventing the use in interstate or foreign commerce, as hereinafter provided, of meat and meat food products which are unsound, unhealthful, unwholesome, or otherwise unfit for human food, the Secretary of Agriculture, at his discretion, may cause to be made, by inspectors appointed for that purpose, an examination and inspection of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats before they shall be allowed to enter into any slaughtering, packing, meat-canning, rendering, or similar establishment, in which they are to be slaughtered and the meat and meat food products thereof are to be used in interstate or foreign commerce; and all cattle, swine, sheep, and goats found on such inspection to show symptoms of disease shall be set apart and slaughtered separately from all other cattle, sheep, swine, or goats, and when so slaughtered the carcasses of said cattle, sheep, swine, or goats shall be subject to a careful examination and inspection, all as provided by the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, as herein provided for.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this paragraph.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will not the gentleman from Illinois eserve the point of order and have an explanation?

Mr. MANN. The explanation can be made on the point of Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not properly. Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I am not sure that this is subject to a point of I make it because it is as easy to discuss the status under the point of order as it is otherwise. Beginning at line 17 on page 14 and ending with line 11 on page 28 the entire paragraph is simply a copy practically of the meat-inspection provision in the law of last year. A few changes have been made in the wording.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no change, except one.

Mr. MANN. The only difference in the paragraph is the insertion of the word "hereafter."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is new legislation.

Mr. MANN. If the old existing law is permanent legislation, then there is no necessity for the provision in this bill. I understand it to be the position of the distinguished gentleman from New York in charge of the bill that the old law, in fact, is permanent legislation, and that this item had been inserted in the bill at this time not because he believed, and probably not because the committee believed, that there is any doubt of it, but because a gentleman now in the position of solicitor to the Department of Agriculture has had some doubts about the matter. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt myself, not the slightest, and I do not believe that any lawyer wherever he may be placed will have any doubt, that the legislation of last year is permanent legislation, although it appeared in an appropriation act.

The legislation of last year provides not for something in connection with appropriations of that year, but it provides legislation in the form not as a proviso, but as a positive enactment and follows it up with the statement that there is permanently appropriated for each year $3,000,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. The word "hereafter" is not used.

Mr. MANN. The word "hereafter" does not appear, and it is not necessary. I call the attention of the Chairman to the decision of the Comptroller, found in 6 Comptroller's Decisions, page 904, where there was a proviso reading like this, after an appropriation of $1,900,000 had been made for certain expenses in connection with the collection of revenue:

Provided, That the compensation of the chief of the internal-revuue agents should not exceed $10 per day and all the other agents of exceeding $7 per day, etc.

The question raised was whether that proviso was a limitation upon that appropriation or whether it was permanent legislation. The word "hereafter" did not occur in the provision. The Comptroller said:

By necessary implication these provisos repeal and abrogate what was then existing law. They appear to be permanent and general in their scope and not intended to affect only the expenditure of this particular appropriation. I therefore conclude that this provision of law is general and permanent in its nature.

In a case where the Comptroller held that, the word "hereafter" not being inserted, it was not permanent legislation he expressly held that if it appeared to be the intention of Congress to make permanent legislation, it was or would be permanent legislation although in an appropriation act. This decision made in reference to the word "hereafter" was a decision arising in reference to the Light-House Board and lighthouse expenditures. In the act of Congress it was provided in the expenditures of the Light-House Board in the sundry civil appropriation bill as follows:

Provided, That lenses and lense glass for the use of the Light-House Establishment may be imported free of duty.

The question arose whether that was a limitation on that appropriation or whether that was a permanent enactment of law making free lenses and lense glass. The question was as to whether this proviso, and it was in the nature of a proviso, was permanent legislation affecting the tariff laws or whether it simply applied to that appropriation, and it is worth while to read what the Comptroller said and decided in respect to the matter. I read from volume 7, Decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury, at page 839:

matter. I read from volume 7, Decisions of the Comptroller of the Treasury, at page S39:

But the practice of Congress of inserting general and permanent legislation in annual appropriation acts in the form of a proviso has become so extensive that it is frequently difficult to determine whether a particular proviso in such an act is intended to apply only to the appropriation for the fiscal year to which it is attached or is intended to be permanent legislation and apply to future appropriations for the same object. In view of this practice it would not be permissible to presume that a proviso in such an act is limited in its application to the particular fiscal year for which the appropriation is made merely because the provision is in the form of a proviso. In general, I think, a proviso in such an act, which is itself limited in its duration, should not be construed as permanent legislation unless the language used in the proviso or the nature of the provision renders it clear that such was the intention of Congress.

Usually the word "hereafter," when used in a proviso in such an act, indicates an intention to extend the application of the proviso to future appropriations. The absence of this word and of other words indicating futurity from the language of this proviso is to be observed. Where, however, the provision is in its nature general, and bears no particular relation to the object of the appropriation to which the proviso is attached, it may clearly indicate an intention of general and permanent legislation. For example, if this proviso had excepted from duty all articles imported for the use of the Government, I think I should infer that such a provision was intended to be general and permanent legislation, although included in a particular annual appropriation, and although it did not use the word "hereafter." But the proviso indicates an intention to enact general and permanent legislation, and that it must be construed to be limited in its operation to the particular appropriation of which it f

In that case it was held that in the particular case the proviso was not general legislation. As a matter of fact, everything connected with this pending item in the last and existing appropriation acts shows that it was not intended as a matter of the fiscal year, but was intended as permanent legislation. How ridiculous it would be to hold that you make the law read so, and so, and then provide for a permanent appropriation of $3,000,000 and say that the intention of Congress was that it should only apply to the one year. And the position of the solicitor—the very distinguished solicitor of the Department of Agriculture—is certainly contrary to the knowledge of every Member of this House and of every lawyer of the country. Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman explain the objection or the harm of leaving this provision in the bill, if there should be any possible doubt about it? What is the harm of leaving it in?

Mr. MANN. The harm is that it brings up the whole matter again, after the fight of last year, which was then a very diffi-cult proposition to the House, to the other end of the Capitol, and to the other end of the avenue and to the whole country, when everybody was stirred up. This legislation was compromise legislation, and if it is permanent as compromise legislation let it remain where it is until the proper committee reports a proper change in the legislation. This throws the whole matter open for discussion, not only in this House, but in another body and possibly in still another body-a conference committee-and

I think we ought to know whether it is permanent law or not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is making a mountain out of a molehill. The status of legislation inserted on an appropriation bill has always been, to a certain extent, uncertain. You have just seen an item stricken out that has been carried in this bill for three or four years. You have seen it stricken out to-day on a point of order not exactly parallel, and I only quote it to show you how uncertain all legislation on appropriation bills is. Comptrollers may differ in their opinions. Now, we simply reinsert it as a matter of safety, and we put in the word "hereafter." If this stands, the whole item may be omitted next year. That is the whole situa-tion in a nutshell, and I think the gentleman from Illinois is really making a mountain out of a molehill. It is simply a question of printing.

Mr. MANN. I thought last year a distinguished Senator was making a mountain out of a molehill, but whether he was or not he got the legislation-over the head of the distinguished gentleman from New York at that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, if the Department of Agriculture is in any doubt whatever as to the question about this being permanent legislation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are in doubt, and it is on their suggestion we inserted the word "hereafter." That the gentleman from Illinois has told you.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I simply desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that I agree with the gentleman from Illinois on the law proposition. I believe he is right, but when on a question of such vital importance it is necessary to make an elaborate law argument to demonstrate which side is correct, and when the uncertainty can be obviated with so little effort, as it can be in this case, it seems to me it would be the part of prudence to allow the provision to be incorporated in the bill containing the word "hereafter," so that in the future there can be no possible question of the fact that it is permanent legislation. This is a provision of great importance, and it would be a great public calamity if the Comptroller of the Treasury or any court should officially decide that if this provision should be omitted, that the last provision being incorporated in an appropriation bill had relation only to the fiscal year provided in that bill is not permanent law. To avoid any possible question—and there seems to be some doubt in the mind of the Department of Agriculture— I think the only prudent course is to leave the provision in the bill and reenact it this year, and then it will not be necessary in

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. MADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say I think it would be very unfortunate if by any chance whatever there should be any mistake made in the phraseology of this paragraph. If the word "hereafter," in the judgment of the Department, seems to be necessary to make it effective, that word ought to go in. The great agricultural interests of the country and meat interests of the country demand a permanent appropriation for the inspection of the meats prepared by the packers of the country, and there ought not to be anything done that would jeopardize the work upon which they have entered, and if this word becomes necessary to make this permanent law, certainly think there ought not to be any question urged to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the introduction of the word "hereafter" is new legislation, and therefore sustains the point of order to the whole paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection whatever to that particular item in the bill, if it is understood that this matter is to go through in the same way it was last year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely.
Mr. MANN. I am not willing, so far as I am concerned, to open up this subject to discussion and debate as to the merits of the original proposition at this time. If it is understood that the thing is to go as it was last year and be settled upon the same basis, I am willing to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Before the Chair acts on the proposed understanding I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is that?
The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the committee is being interrogated by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is so much noise about me, Mr. Chairman, that I can not hear.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I would like to ask the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, whether or not there is any change in this portion of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not the slightest; only the word "hereafter" has been added, as the gentleman from Illinois has called attention. That is the only change; not a "t" crossed nor an " dotted differently from last year.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I would like to ask further whether or not any doubt has arisen as to the sufficiency of the $3,000,000 annual appropriation to meet the purposes of the act?
Mr. WADSWORTH. Not the slightest. The Department of Agriculture reports that they will have something to spare, pos-

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Is there anything before the gentleman's committee, or within his knowledge, which leads him to believe that any further legislation is necessary on this subject at this time?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is not. The testimony of Doctor Melvin before the committee was to the effect that the law was working very smoothly and very effectively.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Then it is the gentleman's information as chairman-

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is: and that is the opinion also given by Doctor Melvin in his testimony before the committee.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Then it is the gentleman's opinion, as chairman of the committee, that if this act is passed now in this permanent form no amendment will be necessary in the near future?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think any amendment will be

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the assurance that has been given, which, of course, can bind no Member of the House, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. To rescind the point of order and the decision of the Chair thereon?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, if it is in order, I will ask unanimous consent that the reading of this portion of the bill relating to meat inspection be omitted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that, except at the bottom of page 27 I want to strike out an unnecessary clause. It is a repetition, or an unnecessary appro-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not want to make $6,000,000 of appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KEN-NEDY] asks unanimous consent that the further reading of this portion of the bill be omitted. Is there objection? pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, has unanimous consent been granted to omit the reading?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.
Mr. WADSWORTH. At the bottom of page 27 there is the following clause, commencing with line 23:

That there is permanently appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000,000, for the expenses of the inspection of cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, and the meat and meat-food products thereof.

And so forth.

I move to strike that all out, as that is carried now by another bill, is a permanent appropriation, and is unnecessary here, and if included would be interpreted to carry $6,000,000. I therefore move to strike out from line 23, including line 23, page 27, down to line 11, on page 28, including line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr.

WADSWORTH] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 27 and 28, strike out all of lines 23, 24, and 25 on page 27, and all of lines 1 to 11, both inclusive, on page 28.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out lines 23, 24, and 25 on page 27, and down to and including the word "year," in line 6, page 28. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that the gentleman's amendment would strike out the provision requiring annual estimates to be made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is in the current law now.
Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. We will have the same trouble about that as we have about the other provisions of the act of lousness of putting any of it in is that they propose to strike out the only important thing there is in it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me explain that, Mr. Chairman. In making the copy for the printer we did not cut out just far enough. That is one of those mistakes that will occur in any committee

Mr. MANN. I am talking about the holding of some gentleman in the Agriculture Department that the "whereases" are not permanent law. The real thing is permanent law. This inserts the "whereas" and strikes out the "real thing," which is

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska takes precedence.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to letting it go if he wants it. I am not going to waste time on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Bureau of Animal Industry, $1,031,980; (also $3,000,000 carried by a permanent appropriation under an act of Congress approved June 30, 1906 (public act No. 382).

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the committee just inserted that for the information of the House. It is not necessary to go in for this year, and therefore I move to strike out that portion reading:

Also $3,000,000 carried by a permanent appropriation under an act of Congress aproved June 13, 1906 (public act No. 382).

That is simply for the information of the House. It is not necessary to reprint it in the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of the committee to the effect of the last amendment that was made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offered an amendment striking out the whole paragraph. The gentleman from Nebraska made a preferential amendment, striking out a portion of the paragraph, intending to perfect the paragraph. His motion prevailed. The question then recurred on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York; and that motion was put and prevailed, and the amendment was agreed to. In the opinion of the Chair, that strikes out the whole para-

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a parliamentary situation that perhaps the gentleman did not intend. I supposed the effect of his motion was to strike out all from line 23 down to line 6, and including the words "for each year," and leave the remainder of the paragraph. I say that was the intent of the gentleman from Nebraska, whether the parliamentary situation leaves it that way or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York can offer an amendment restoring the matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well. The Clerk has got the other pending first. In line 13 strike out "three millions" and everything following that in the paragraph.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will get that all right. Now. Mr. Chairman, I make a new motion to reinsert in the bill the paragraph on the bill beginning on page 28, commencing with line 6, with the words "And the Secretary of Agriculture" down to and including line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that reported again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 28 the language printed, beginning in line 6 with e words "and the Secretary of Agriculture," going to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. That is all right.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, on line 13, commencing with the words "also three million dollars," including lines 14, 15, and 16, I move to strike that out, as it is simply unnecessary, and was printed merely for the information of the

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 13, 14, 15, and 16 the language within the

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska, Mr. Chairman, I would like Mr. MANN. There will be no trouble about that. The ridicu- to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I understand that the insertion of this meat-inspection law in this bill is because there is some question whether or not it is permanent Now, if this is true, and that is sufficient reason for inserting this meat-inspection law in this bill at all, then it would seem to be necessary to carry the permanent annual appropriation also in this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; that is cared for in another appropriation bill. It is a permanent appropriation.

Mr. MANN. It is carried in the old law precisely the same as it is here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But it is a permanent appropriation, Mr. MANN. The whole thing is a permanent law, and the gentleman knows it as well as I do.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. This is my understanding of the whole situation. There was inserted in the agricultural appropriation bill last year a provision for meat inspection, and an annual permanent appropriation of $3,000,000. That law is repeated in this bill to-day, because it is a question whether that law passed last session is permanent law. Now, the greater includes the lesser; and if there is any question in the minds of the members of the committee, if there is any question in the minds of the Members of this House, as to whether or not the law passed last year is permanent law, and it is necessary to reenact it at all, then it is just as necessary to reappropriate this $3,000,000, because the appropriation was simply a part of the act, and if this motion prevails we will be in the position of reenacting the law without the permanent annual appropriaof reenacting the law without the permanent annual appropria-tion for carrying on this very important work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a separate paragraph, and it is contained in these words: "That there is permanently appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000,000, for the expenses of the inspection of cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, and the meat in food products thereof, which enter into interstate or foreign commerce." That makes it a permanent appropriation, and it is not necessary to repeat it.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. But, Mr. Chairman, that has been stricken out on the motion of the gentleman from New

Mr. MANN. That is a part of the existing law. Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska, Yes, if the law of last year stands; but if it is necessary to reenact the law at all, it is necessary to reappropriate the money.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. It is not necessary.
Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a matter of appropriation.

The other is a matter of legislation.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I contend that if there is any question about the necessity for reenacting the law at all, and it is necessary to reenact it, it is just as necessary now to reappropriate the $3,000,000 annually to carry on the work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a perfect example of the uncertain status of legislation on appropriation bills. The Department says to us that that portion of the law is unnecessary, but that the word "hereafter" should be used in the first part of the law, covering the legislative paragraphs of the bill.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, my answer is that that position is not tenable at all. Either the law, so far as it relates to meat inspection, which we passed last year, is good in its entirety and carries with it the appropriation or it is not good at all. Now, the House has taken the position to-day that it is necessary to reenact the law. If it is necessary to reenact the law it is necessary to reappropriate the money.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can only say to the gentleman that the law officer of the Department of Agriculture does not think it necessary, and the committee has been governed to a great extent by his judgment of the situation.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I have great respect for all the officials of the Government. My judgment is that the official of the Agricultural Department, in desiring us to reenact this law, is wrong; but if he is right as to the law in its entirety, then he is wrong as to the other, because the greater includes the lesser, and the appropriation is only a part of the law which we are required to reenact.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will correct the total.

There was no objection,

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to a situation that I think is somewhat serious, in relation to the incorporation of the meat-inspection law in this bill. have added one word to the first paragraph of that law, and the Chair has held that the change makes the act new legislation under the rules of the House. Now, if we reenact it into law, it will, of course, be the reenactment of the original meat-inspection law with an amendment, and the effect of it will be, by necessary implication, to repeal the original law, and it will likewise repeal or abrogate the power of the Government to prosecute for any offenses that might possibly have arisen under that law

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, I desire to recall to his attention the provision in the statute providing that where a law is repealed it still controls as to any prosecution for a violation of that law before the repeal.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is there a general provision of that kind?

Mr. MANN. There is a general provision of the Revised Statutes covering that point as perfectly and as strongly as it can possibly be done in the English language.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I remember a discussion in the Federal court at Chicago, in the Standard Oil case recently, a very able discussion, upon the motion to quash the indictments, I think, or perhaps on demurrer to a plea, where the court took the question under advisement and held ultimately that the saving clause was broad enough to authorize the Government to prosecute for offenses that were committed before the passing of an amendment to the Elkins law.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, in the rate law there was a provision which expressly provided that the repeal of any old law should not affect prosecutions then pending in court, and it was claimed by defendant's counsel that the special provision in reference to repeals took the whole thing out from under the operation of the general provisions of the statute.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the gentleman from Illinois is satisfied that there is a general statute reserving the right of the Government to prosecute for crimes that may have been committed under the law in existence now, I am satisfied; but in the absence of such a statute, I think the gentleman will agree with me that the reenactment of this law would be very dangerous.

Mr. MANN. It would be very dangerous.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Unless we incorporate into it a savings clause, saving to the Government the right to prosecute for offenses that may have heretofore been committed.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that at the request of the district attorney at Chicago, who tried this matter, I went into the subject here to ascertain the history of the provision that went into the bill, and in connection with that had occasion to look up the general provision of the law-and there is such a general provision that absolutely covers the case.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws The CHAIRMAN. the pro forma amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

the pro forma amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Plant Industry: To investigate fruits, fruit trees, grain, cotton, tobacco, vegetables, grasses, forage, drug, medicinal, poisonous, fiber, and other plants and plant industries, in cooperation with other branches of the Department, the State experiment stations, and practical farmers; to study plant industries, in cooperation with other branches of the Department, the State experiment stations, and practical farmers; to study plant physiology in relation to crop production; to originate and improve crops by breeding and selection; to investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice; to investigate the feeding value of farm crops and the use of fertilizers; to investigate the causes of decay in forest timber and timber used for construction purposes, and to devise means for preventing the decay of the same: to investigate the practical application in agriculture of the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen by bacteria and other micro-organisms in soils and in the root tubercles of leguminous and other plants; to cultivate and distribute these nitrogen fixers; to study and find methods for preventing algal and other contaminations of water supplies; to carry on special investigations of the conditions of grain production, handling, grading, and transit, and of the means of improving the same; to model fruits, vegetables, and other plants, and furnish duplicate models to the experiment stations of the several States, as far as found practicable; to investigate the methods of harvesting, packing, storing, and shipping fruits and vegetables within the United States and to foreign countries; to cultivate and care for experimental gardens and grounds, manage and maintain conservatories, greenhouses, and plant and fruit propagating houses; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the necessary improvements to establish and maintain a general experimental farm an ment, be granted leaves of absence not to exceed fifteen days in any one year, which leave may in exceptional and meritorious cases, where such an employee is ill, be extended, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, not to exceed fifteen days additional in any one year.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "making," in line 19, page 32, and inserting the words "growing and curing." As it reads now it is to investigate and report on the cost of making tea.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 32, line 19, strike out the word "making" and insert the words "growing and curing."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. For some years I see a provision has been carried in this bill, which appears on page 32, line 5, "to model fruit, vege-tables, and other plants, and furnish models," etc. I see it has been a provision in the bill for many years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is for the purpose of furnishing models of different varieties of apples, peaches, plums, including new varieties that may be raised.

Mr. PERKINS. What does the gentleman mean-making casts of them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; making exact facsimiles or models of the new varieties.

Mr. PERKINS. And they are sent to various colleges?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and to experimental stations; and models are kept in the museum of the Department.

Mr. PERKINS. It requires to be done every year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; for new varieties are constantly being grown:
Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collating, mapping, illustrating, digesting, printing, reporting, publishing, and disseminating information on the results of these investigations and experiments. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to obtain in the open market samples of seeds of grass, clover, or alfalfa, test the same, and if any such seeds are found to be adulterated or misbranded, or any seeds of Canada blue grass (Poa compressa) are obtained under any other name than Canada blue grass or Poa compressa, to publish the results of the tests, together with the names of the persons by whom the seeds were offered for sale.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk, to'go in after line 2, page 34. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 2, page 34, the following:

"Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall deliver to the Secretary of Agriculture, upon his request from time to time, samples of seed which is being imported into the United States or offered for import, giving notice thereof to the owner or consignee, who may appear before the Secretary of Agriculture, and have the right to introduce testimony, and if it appear from the examination of such samples that any seed offered to be imported into the United States is adulterated or misbranded, or is otherwise falsely labeled in any respect, or is of a quality forbidden entry into, or forbidden to be sold or restricted in sale in the country from which it is exported, or is intended for adulteration purposes, or is a kind mainly used in this country, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, for adulteration purposes, the said seed shall be refused admission, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall refuse delivery to the consignee and shall cause the destruction of any seed refused delivery which shall not be exported by the consignee within three months from the date of notice of such refusal, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury went provided in the Secretary of the Treasury, when demanded, for the purpose of excluding it from the country, or for any other purpose, said consignee shall forfeit the full amount of the bond: And provided further, That all charges for storage, cartage, and labor on seed which is refused admission or delivery shall be paid by the owner or consignee, and in default of such p

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that is subject to a point of order; but I will not raise it, because I consider it excellent legislation.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. Mr. MANN. There is no doubt but that the item is subject to a point of order if the gentleman from New York raises it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

For actual and necessary traveling expenses; for telegraph and telephone service; for gas and electric current; for forage, ice, postage, and washing towels; for express and freight charges; for the purchase of chemicals, materials, office, field, and laboratory supplies, fertilizers, office fixtures, fuel, apparatus, machinery, tools, and other implements, and repairs to same, horses, vehicles, horseshoeing, and harness; for rent and repairs, not to exceed $19,000, in the District of Columbia; and for all other necessary expenses.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, page 34, after the word "expenses," insert:
"Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend $5,000 of the amount hereby appropriated to specially investigate parasites and orchard diseases prevalent in the Ozark and mountain region in the States of Missouri and Arkansas, and work out, if possible, in cooperation with the fruit experiment stations in said State, the problem of prevention of such diseases and destruction of parasites, and diffuse information along these lines."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, this is the same provision inserted in the agricultural appropriation bill passed at the last session. The gentleman from Kansas has explained how this work has been carried on, and that it is a good thing, and that it is a benefit to those people there. A representative of the Department of Agriculture called me to the door during that time and was asking me about it and telling me what the Department had done. He told me that they had sent estimates embodying this character of work.

Why it was stricken out of the bill I do not know. He tried to make me believe that that provision was yet in the bill, and I had a hard time convincing him to the contrary, not having the bill there. I think that this amendment ought to be adopted. I would like to have a little of the work done in my district as well as in some of the other districts.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the House will recall the correspondence sent to the desk by Mr. Scott, of Kansas, which covers this whole question. The Department says they have already expended four or five thousand dollars in that investigation, and that they propose to spend some more, and that they have the power to do so under the general powers given to them by the act, and that with the expenditure of this additional sum the work will be completed.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I was told that the committee, in making its report, reduced the amount.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; we did not.

Mr. MANN. That it reduced the amount estimated equal to the amount now proposed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; we allowed the estimates in full. Mr. MANN. The estimate on this item is less than the current law, as I understand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it is not. The estimate is increased $106,000, as will be seen by the report. The Bureau of Plant Industry, increase on the lump sum, $81,100, equal to exactly what they estimated for, and on the salary list the increase is $25,640, making a total increase for the Bureau of Plant Industry of $106,740, exactly the estimates of the Department.

Mr. MANN. Then my information was wrong. May I ask the gentleman this: Whether in leaving out the amount which was estimated for, as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Murphy], it was the opinion of the committee that the Department had the jurisdiction already to spend the money for that purpose?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. And it was expected they would do it if that was necessary?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Absolutely; and the letter read at the desk confirms my judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I will let the question be decided on its merits. I hope the amendment will not be adopted, because it is unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

MURPHY) there were—ayes 30, noes 47. So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Grain investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish, at such points as he may deem expedient, laboratories for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the nature, quality, and condition of any sample, parcel, or consignment of seed or grain, including rent and the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to report upon such samples, parcels, or consignments from time to time, and the reports so made shall serve as a basis for the fixing of definite grades and for the issuance of certificates of inspection when requested by the consignor or consignee of any grain entering into interstate or foreign commerce.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a few questions. On line 16, page 34, the bill now before the House reads: "to establish at such points as he may deem expedient." I notice that in the law as enacted last year the expedient." I notice that in the law as enacted last year the words "of export" were inserted after the words "at such points." That is, the old law made provision for this work to be carried on at such points of export as the Secretary might determine. The present bill provides for establishing laborateries at such points as the Secretary may determine without limiting them to points of export. I would like to ask the chairman what the intention is as to that matter?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is to affect interstate commerce as well as commerce destined for foreign lands.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. For instance, Mr. Chairman, we have established in the city of Omaha what is rapidly becoming one of the greatest grain markets of the country. Does this bill contemplate that the Secretary of Agriculture may establish one of these points at the city of Omaha?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly he has the power to do it if he deems it expedient, and I am sure that under the persuasion of my distinguished friend from Nebraska [Mr. Kennedy] he will establish one there.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I may have some doubt about that, but as I understand the chairman of the committee it is the intention to leave the Secretary free to establish these laboratories anywhere in the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; where he deems expedient, with that limitation.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I am sure we will try to have him see that it is expedient to establish one in the city of Omaha. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the motion. Will the gentleman in charge of the bill undertake to say that it is the purpose of the General Government to establish seed laboratories for the purpose of determining the grade and quality of all the grain that is to be used in the market? Are we to have a warehouse-inspection service in Omaha and St. Louis and St. Paul and Minneapolis and Chicago and everywhere else at the expense of the General Government?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the gentleman would read the paragraph he will see just what powers are granted to the Sec-

Mr. MANN. Oh, the powers granted to the Secretary of Agriculture would authorize him, if he could have the money, to establish a seed laboratory in every city in the Union. The only limitation is the money now. Is it the purpose, is my question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course it is not the purpose to establish them ad libitum all over the country in every hamlet and village. The gentleman should not ask such a question as that.

Mr. MANN. The grain-inspection service at Chicago alone and Omaha alone amounts to a great deal more than the appropriation here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is:

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish, at such points as he may deem expedient, laboratories for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the nature, quality, and condition of any sample, parcel, or consignment of seed or grain, including rent and the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to report upon such samples, parcels, or consignments from time to time, and the reports so made shall serve as a basis for the fixing of definite grades and for the issuance of certificates of inspection when requested by the consignor or consignee of any grain entering into interstate or foreign commerce.

Mr. MANN That is exactly what I am trying to find out

Mr. MANN. That is exactly what I am trying to find out. The power conferred there is a power to grade grain which is now contained in the local States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On request.

Mr. MANN. That is the way it is all done. All grain that comes in the great grain centers is graded and sold by sample and then put in the warehouses there. It is graded and sold and shipped by grades. Now, is it proposed by the Committee on Agriculture to provide as an opening wedge here that the General Government proposes to do the grading of grain, which will cost millions of dollars? That is the authority conferred by this proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me send to the desk and have read what the Secretary of Agriculture says upon that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks consent to send to the Clerk's desk and have read the following. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

GRAIN STANDARDIZATION.

From time to time during the past five years demands have been made upon the Department for aid in the grading and handling of grain. It has been fully recognized that this is a matter which demands most careful investigation, as both our home and foreign markets are involved. Grain grading as now practiced by the various State and other organized bodies has not been satisfactory, chiefly on account of the lack of uniformity. The Department has consistently held the ground that some system of standardization is absolutely necessary as a first step toward securing uniform methods of grain grading. With a view to eventually bringing about this standardization, Congress at its last session authorized the establishment of laboratories for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the nature, quality, and condition of any sample, parcel, or consignment of seed or grain entering into interstate or foreign commerce. After a careful study of the situation two laboratories, all the funds at hand would permit, have been established—one at Baltimore, Md., the other at New Orleans, La. At both places the Department has received the cordial coperation of the chambers of commerce, and is now about to enter upon the regular duties connected with the laboratories.

It will be the object of these laboratories to make a thorough study of present systems of grain grading with a view to reaching, if practicable, conclusions which will make standardization possible. It is recognized that much preliminary work must be done, and, furthermore, that special apparatus will have to be devised for quickly determining the moisture content of grain, and for conducting other observations and investigations. A moisture-determining apparatus has already been devised and is now in use at our laboratories. It is believed that improvements can be made in these devices and the Department's officers are already at work on this problem.

Recognizing the need for the closest relations with the grain trade, the Department has secured the services of an expert in grain grading, whose long experience should be of the greatest value in working out the many problems which must necessarily be connected with this important line of work.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I would like

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, with the consent of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well; just for a question.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I would like to ask the gentle-man from Illinois if he objects to the establishment of one of these points at Chicago?

Mr. MANN. Why I object, Mr. Chairman, to having the General Government enter upon a policy of having all the grain grading done by the General Government without knowing that is the policy

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Then you object to establishing one of these points in the city of Chicago?

Mr. MANN. They will not establish one in Chicago at my request, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I think there is one already established in Chicago.

Mr. MANN. There may be, but if one even should be established it would be established at one of the greatest grain centers in the world, but I do not ask for it, and the Chicago people are not asking for it, I will say to the gentleman. have now an almost perfect system of grading grain, which I commend to the gentleman from Omaha, because if they would grade grain at Omaha as they do at Chicago they would have far better success in handling good grain.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois another question. Then you are perfectly satisfied with the inspection you have in Chicago, and should this provision remain in the bill you do not want one of these points established in Chicago?

Well, the gentleman has not asked me another Mr. MANN. question. He is asking me the same question over again, and I have answered it.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Then the gentleman is satisfied that the inspection now had in the city of Chicago is sufficient?

Mr. MANN. I am satisfied it is sufficient.
Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Now, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that we are so anxious to establish a high standard of grading grain in the city of Omaha that we want the Government to establish one of these points in that city.

Mr. MANN. What the gentleman wants is to have the General Government do it and pay for it, instead of the local government, and in our case we are willing to pay the expense.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, I hold in my hand the Daily
Consular and Trade Reports, bearing specifically on this subconsular and Trade Reports, bearing specifically on this subject, dated January 25. I can only read the headings. "Grain trade complaints;" "Germany—European dealers uniting against American practices;" "United States alone to blame;" "Coercive measures threatened;" "France—Faulty American grain-inspection methods;" "Strenuous objections"—that is, to our methods; "Variances at shipping ports"—that measures that grain coming if you please from Norfolk is graded dis that grain coming, if you please, from Norfolk is graded dif-ferently from grain coming from New York.

And it goes on. In Spain it is the same way. They complain of the receipts of grain there not coming up to the standards and suggest this simple remedy:

SIMPLE REMEDY PROPOSED.

The remedy sought is so easy of application and the demand for its application is so entirely reasonable that to the importer protracted resistance is incomprehensible. The proper remedy may be applied either by the American Government or by the cooperation of American trade bodies. The starting point of the reform would be, naturally, the establishment of standard descriptions by law. This done, if the Government were charged with the issuance of inspection certificates, the service would be removed from local influences, and the so-called "official American certificates" would be rehabilitated. If this very rational proposition be objected to, the surest means of effectively combating it would be the holding of a conference of American grain-inspecting bodies for the adoption of grain standards and for the adoption of ways and means of drawing standard samples, to be deposited in American consulates at great European ports, or to be issued upon demand to importers, and to provide for a board of inspectors, the members thereof to be transferred at intervals and liberated from every form of local pressure.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the gentleman a question?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY 1?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. As I understand it, this proposition the gentleman claims is merely to establish standards of grain?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should say, in collaboration with the different local authorities.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, if you have the standard established there is only one way to determine whether the grain sold measures up to that standard or not, and that is to have the grain inspected for the purpose of ascertaining that fact. Now, who is to make the inspection? If you are going to improve our market and get away from the coercive measures of the foreign country referred to in the consular report you read, who is to make the inspection of the grain that is shipped for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it comes up to the standard fixed by the Agricultural Department?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think eventually it will be done by the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. Eventually it will be done by the Government, and this is the entering wedge to that service. The State of Minnesota has to-day a most perfect wheat inspection, or grain inspection, service, and the standards of wheat inspected under that service are accepted everywhere and anywhere throughout the world.

Mr. MANN. Except Chicago.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is accepted at Chicago. [Laughter.] Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. And I wish to insert "e Omaha.'

Mr. GRONNA. Is the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Taw-NEY] aware of the fact that at Duluth the bankers of the State of North Dakota made an investigation and found that there were thousands of bushels of grain shipped out from the elevators at Duluth that are of higher grade than that at which it was bought?

Mr. TAWNEY. That may all be.
Mr. GRONNA. As a matter of fact, and I want to call the attention of this committee in connection with what the chairman of this committee has said, to the fact that Europe has discriminated against the wheat and against the other grain of the American farmer because he had no standard. [Cries of

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if this service is to be extended to the inspection of all grains for export it means that it must be extended to the inspection by the Federal Government of all grains produced in the United States. When that service is established the inspection service which we now have in the Agricultural Department will be as nothing compared to the size of that inspection authorizing the United States to inspect the grains of the United States.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr.

TAWNEY] yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Why is it necessary to extend that service any more than it would be to extend uniform weights and measures throughout the United States. I suppose that the gentleman knows that practically all the measures that we have in the United States now were established by Executive order simply or was established by the providing of uniform weights and measures to the different Government institutions that use weights and measures. Why is it not in the line of good government, in the line of what the Government ought to do, to establish standards for the inspection of grains, and when the dealers in grain, as they will, realize that standards have been established to which they may conform, it becomes then the in-terest of every man dealing in grain to conform to those standards.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman has evidently never investigated the subject of the inspection of grain or he would not attempt to draw a parallel between that and a standard of weights and measures. If we fix a standard in wheat, say, by authority of law, the consumers of wheat in this country will not know whether that wheat measures up to the standard or not unless the wheat that is sold for consumption has the certificate of the Government official who has inspected the wheat for the purpose of determining whether it comes up to the standard fixed by the law or by the Department or not. Therefore I say that when you are embarking upon this service you are embarking upon a service the end of which you do not know and can not foresee.

Every State that is producing wheat to any great extent has its own inspection law. Minnesota has its State inspection law and has a large force of inspectors. That force of inspectors is under the railroad and warehouse commission of the State. is a regular force of men employed at the principal terminal points where wheat is received, and that wheat is inspected according to the standard fixed by the State of Minnesota, which standard, I say, is accepted at Omaha, Chicago, and all over the United States, and it is really the only reliable standard.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Is not the gentleman confusing the work of inspection with the work of providing standards for inspection?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I am not. I understand the gentleman to say that this is to establish standards in grain. The necessary logical sequence of that is the establishment of an inspection service throughout the United States for the purpose of determining whether or not the grain that is produced and offered for sale measures up to the standard that is fixed. Now, you can not have one and have any benefit from it, unless you have the other and establish an inspection force.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Why any more inspection than weight? Mr. TAWNEY. Why, certainly, it seems to me if this provision is to extend as far as the gentleman from New York says it is, we ought to consider very seriously and very carefully before embarking upon this new service.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the object of this provision is intended to go any further than fixing standards. I do not understand that it is contemplated by its provisions that after the standard is fixed that the Government of the United States should furnish at Government expense inspectors or men to gauge and inspect grain thereafter.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. MANN. What is the meaning of that portion of the provision which says "and for the issuance of certificates of inspection when requested by the consignor or consignee;" and is that to be at the expense of the Government; and if not, what authority has the Government to receive money gratuitously?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I look upon that the same as I do all the provisions of the pure-food law, which the gentleman helped to enact, wherein and whereby the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to and is now fixing standards. Will the gentleman say that after the standards under the pure-food law are fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, that the Governnent is going to furnish inspectors at every point where every thing is sold in order to see that the provisions of the law are not contravened after the standard is fixed? Can not the States look after that; and in regard to grain, can not the States do as we are now doing in Minnesota by inspection, and make that conform to the standard? The small sum of $15,000 that is appropriated in this bill is simply for establishing the grade of wheat in certain localities. For instance, No. 1 hard and No. 1 northern Minnesota and Dakota will have a definite grade and standard fixed under this bill, and certain winter and southern wheats will have certain grade thereafter.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If you are just going to fix standards, why can not you do it at Washington, and why have these investigations at different parts of the country?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Because they do not raise wheat in Washington.

Mr. DRISCOLL. But you can get your samples here. Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Oh, there will be, no doubt, a large number of samples. The object of this provision is to establish laboratories at different points, where they will have a greater number of samples, and it will be more convenient.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I am quite in sympathy with the purpose of that part of the bill which provides for the fixing of standards; but I would like to see whether it is the purpose there to go into the business of issuing grain certificates, charging for them, and then taking the money and hiring men-to go into the business of keeping or issuing grain certificates, so that it becomes a policy of the Government to inspect all grain that is shipped in interstate commerce?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I will say that if I lived in a city like Chicago, that has become one of the small grain markets of the world at the present time, I would say that perhaps the $15,000 appropriated by this provision would be sufficient to inspect the grain received there.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman in that respect, as in some others, displays his lack of knowledge.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Perhaps so. But I wish to say this, that the gentleman from Illinois is apparently living in the past. There was a time when Chicago was considered a great grain market in fact. To-day it is the greatest grain market upon the board of trade, where they deal in options; but if he will examine the daily reports for the last two years, this present year and three years ago, he will discover that the daily receipts of grain at the city of Chicago run from twenty-five to fifty and sometimes seventy-five or a hundred carloads a day. If he goes to Duluth he will find that during the same time they receive from 500 to 1,000 carloads a day. If he goes to the city of Minneapolis he will find the same thing. He will find, furthermore, that for the last year or two Duluth receives more flax daily than Chicago receives wheat. Chicago used to be a city in the wheat line, but now it has become truly the Windy City in the option line. [Laughter.] I will say, furthermore, that the wheat that goes to Chicago is piled up in a few terminal elevators for the purpose of influencing the board of trade market. It is used by Mr. Armour, with his immense elevators there, to control the price of wheat upon the board of trade. The wheat that goes to Minneapolis is not received there for any such purpose, and they receive sometimes as high as a million bushels a day, but it is ground into flour and then shipped to feed the denizens of Chicago. The wheat that is received at Duluth, that which is not ground into flour, is shipped by way of the Lakes to Buffalo and from thence to New York and across the ocean. Those are the wheat markets of the world at the present time. I will say, however, that Omaha more than doubles Chicago, receives almost 5 bushels of wheat to 1 bushel received in Chicago. [Laughter.]

At the same time, the State of Minnesota expends almost $15,000 monthly to inspect its own wheat. But there is a diversity of opinion as to what the proper standard is, and this proposition in this bill is for the purpose of establishing laboratories at St. Paul, Duluth, Omaha, and possibly a good one at Chicago, or some other little actual cash wheat market like that, for the purpose of fixing a standard of the wheat that gravitates toward that center. That is what it is for; not for inspection after the standard is fixed. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this paragraph has been ex-

Mr. MANN. Then I move to strike out the last two words.

I will not ask unanimous consent.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to strike out the words "including rent and the employment of labor in the city of Washington."

Mr. MANN. The Chairman has just ruled that an amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman's amendment is in order, why was not my amendment in order? Have I not as much right as the gentleman from Minnesota to offer an amendment? what the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to know amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is.

Mr. MANN. I beg the Chair to listen to my amendment before ruling it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman, gladly. Mr. MANN. I moved an amendment to strike out the last two words of the paragraph, and the Chair ruled that it was not in

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desired to know what the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota was in order to determine whether it had precedence over the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair, having ascertained by an inspection of the amendment what the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is, now holds that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois must be disposed The motion of the gentleman from Illinois is to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MANN. Is debate in order upon either motion?

The CHAIRMAN. Before the amendment of the gentleman can be disposed of the pending motion must be disposed of, which is to strike out the last word. That was made by the gentleman from Illinois. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw it?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois did not make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska made the motion first, and the Chair thereupon announced that unless objection was heard the pro forma motion of the gentleman from Nebraska would be considered as withdrawn. Thereupon the gentleman from Illinois rose and said he renewed the motion.

Mr. MANN. I think the Chair is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw the motion?

Mr. MANN. I do not withdraw the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the last word.

The question was taken; and the motion was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion now is to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to detain the House by voting on an amendment of that sort. The Chair ruled that debate was exhausted on the paragraph, and if that be the ruling of the Chair, I have no desire to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair intended to state that the time for discussion upon the pending motion was exhausted, and the pending motion was to strike out the last word. Now the gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to enter upon any defense of the city of Chicago against the assault of my distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. Davis]. I am willing to appreciate the greatness of Minnesota as well as the greatness of her Representatives upon the floor of the House. willing to appreciate the greatness of Duluth, of St. Paul, and of Minneapolis. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that in the march of events the wheat production of the country has moved very largely away from the vicinity of Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, and Missouri up into the Northwest.

It is also true that it is now moving away from Minnesota up into the Canadian country. Fortunately, however, for the States which I have mentioned they had something to take the place of wheat, and instead of raising wheat they are now raising corn and cattle and other articles agricultural for the market. When the time comes that the wheat productiveness of the soil of Minnesota has passed I do not know what they will raise in Minnesota. They have not yet been able to find that corn will grow well there. I hope they will find something to raise that will do as well for the country as has wheat.

But, so far as the great market of Chicago is concerned, Chicago is the greatest grain market of the world. It receives more grain per year than is received in any other market in the world, and while it is true that there is some speculation on the Board of Trade at Chicago, it is also true that the real stuff shipped into that town is greater per year than anywhere else and that the market for grain is fixed in accordance with the real article.

It is also true that because of the rigid inspection in Chicago some people have shipped poor grain to other places. I believe that the inspection in the Minnesota towns is good, although it was said by the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota and frequently urged in another place, the inspection in Minnesota is calculated to deceive the farmer and is in the interest purely of the speculators. I have not believed those accusa-The gentleman would now have the General Government enter upon a scheme by which we would take away from the States all of the rights that they have over grain. Is it the position of the gentleman from Minhesota that the doctrine recently laid down, in a way, by the Secretary of State, that the power of the States was likely to be taken away from them by the General Government because the States do not properly exercise their functions? Is the gentleman from Minnesota prepared to say that the States are not properly inspecting grain? Is it the purpose of these gentlemen to have the General Government enter upon the plan of doing all the grain inspection for foreign and domestic commerce? The proposition in the bill is not merely to establish standards--nobody objects to that—but to permit the Department of Agriculture to inspect grain and issue cerificates of inspection-to whom? to a favorite, to a special person, or to everybody? Which is it to be? Is it to be merely the one whom the Secretary of Agriculture or some of his people may look upon favorably, or is everybody to be put on the same plane? The gentleman says it is not necessary; the authority is there.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is not the language beginning on line 22 susceptible of the construction put upon it by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Davis]? I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to this language in line 24 and

The reports so made shall serve as a basis for the fixing of definite grades and for the issuance of certificates of inspection, etc.

Why could not, as suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Davis], this report of the Secretary of Agriculture be used as a basis for the fixing of the grades and for the issuing of certificates by these local people?

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt, I may say to the gentleman, that that will be the effect. I think that is what the Secretary wants to do, but what the gentlemen are defending on the floor is the provision of the bill which probably will not be put into operation, and which if put into operation would take away from the States absolutely the present control they have over grain and turn it over to the General Government.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In reply to that suggestion, it seems to me that any fair construction of that language must coincide with the interpretation put upon it by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Davis]. The report of the Secretary of Agriculture is to be simply the basis for the issuance of certificates by the local authorities.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman has not read the paragraph through. If he will read the last three lines of the paragraph, he will change his opinion.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the amendment which I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 19, beginning with the word "including," strike out the words "including rent and the employment of labor in the city of Washington."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is this: This provision authorizes the employment of personal services here in the city of Washington in the Department of Agriculture out of a lump-sum appropriation, which is in direct violation of the act of 1882 and in violation also and opposed to the policy of Congress ever since that time. There are not to-day any personal services performed in the city of Washington and compensated out of lump-sum appropriations. I observe that in several instances in this bill this act of 1882 and the policy of Congress were entirely disregarded, and the Agricultural Department is given lump-sum appropriations for the employment of personal services here in Washington, which, I think, Congress ought not to approve. I do not think the House ought to approve any change whatever in the policy which has heretofore obtained and which the law expressly provides for.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that going out. I think it is immaterial.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, with only that language which the gentleman indicated going out, I think it would make very bad connection in the bill. Take the provision included in the gentleman's motion, beginning with the word "including," in line 19, and going to and including the word "Washington," in line 20. It would read then "or consignment of seed or grain and elsewhere," so that I think he had better incorporate in his amendment to strike out the words "and elsewhere.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will include those words "and elsewhere."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be amended so as to include the words indicated. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, has that paragraph been passed?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; unless somebody else has an amendment to offer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I desire to move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to offer another amendment. I desire to move to have stricken out all after the word "grades," in line 25, page 34, down to and including the end of the

The Clerk read as follows:

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] if he does not think that he has stricken out more than is necessary?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I do not. I want to strike out all that which authorized the issue of certificates upon the request of the consignor or consignee.

Mr. SCOTT. That is what I understood the gentleman to say, but does not the gentleman think that if he would leave in the last line of the paragraph to the word "commerce," in the third line, it would be better?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will stop at "consignee," in line 2.
Mr. SCOTT. That was the suggestion I wished to make to the gentleman.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I supposed that was the original motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning in line 25, page 24, after the word "grade," strike out "and for the issuance of certificates of inspection when requested by the consignor or consignee."

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to rise has precedence, unless withdrawn.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Just a moment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For what purpose does the gentleman desire to sit any longer?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. I would like to say a word about how this affects the West.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How long? Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Tv

Two minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield two minutes to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the corn, wheat, and other grain raised in the State of Nebraska is at least equal to the grain raised in any part of the country. The grading of grain as now conducted in the city of Omaha is as honestly done as anywhere in the United States. I am heartily in favor of this paragraph. The object which is sought to be attained is perfectly clear, and that is the establishment of uniformity in the grades. The extracts read here to-day from the consular reports show that some questions have arisen with reference to grades of grain generally, and I fear, Mr. Chairman, that these questions have arisen in regard to grain shipped from Chicago as well as from other points, and that these questions have arisen as to wheat shipped from Minnesota as well as from other points. What we want in the West, and the West is gradually becoming the great grain center, is to have an honest and uniform grade established and maintained, so that we may have the full benefit of the excellent quality of grain which we grow and handle-

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the gentleman a question?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Yes.
Mr. GRONNA. Does not the gentleman from Nebraska believe that the only solution of this question is national inspection of grain?

Mr. KENNEDY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that there is any necessity at this time for a general national inspection of grain, but I do believe that this legislation is on the right line, and that it will be beneficial and ought to be sustained by this House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I hope the chairman of the committee will withdraw the motion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And, Mr. Chairman, pending that motion, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Lever] to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois on the subject of seed adulteration, I ask unanimous consent that these circulars of the Department of Agriculture may be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The circulars are as follows:

[United States Department of Agriculture, Office of the Secretary.—Circular No. 12.]

ADULTERATION OF ALFALFA SEED.

The act of Congress making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, contains the following item:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to obtain in the open market samples of seeds of grass, clover, or alfalfa, test the same, and if any such seeds are found to be adulterated or misbranded, or any seeds of Canada blue grass (Poa compressa) are obtained under any other name than Canada blue grass or Poa compressa, to publish the results of the tests, together with the names of the persons by whom the seeds were offered for sale."

Under date of May 25, 1904, a circular letter announcing that the collection and testing of seeds, as directed by this act, would begin July 1, 1904, was sent to the seedsmen of the United States whose names appear in the 1904 edition of "The American Florist Company's Directory of Florists, Nurserymen, and Seedsmen of the United States and Canada," and to wholesale seedsmen whose names are not included in that directory. A copy of the circular sent to the Florists' Exchange was published by that journal in its issue of June 18, 1904.

In carrying out the provisions of the act quoted above, in so far as it relates to alfalfa, offerings for sale were solicited through agents of this Department from 742 seedsmen. Upon examination of the samples of alfalfa seed obtained in the open market as a result of these negotiations 23 lots were found to be adulterated, as shown in the following table:

ADULTERATION OF ALFALFA AND RED CLOVER SEED.

Seeds of alfalfa and red clover have been obtained and tested in accordance with the following paragraph contained in the act of Congress making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to obtain in the open market samples of seeds of grass, clover, or alfalfa, test the same, and if any such seeds are found to be adulterated or misbranded, or any seeds of Canada blue grass (Poa compressa) are obtained under any other name than Canada blue grass or Poa compressa, to publish the results of the tests, together with the names of the persons by whom the seeds were offered for sale."

In carrying out the provisions of this act, 1,272 seedsmen were asked by special agents of this Department for samples of red clover and alfalfa seed, as offered for sale by them. From these seedsmen, 658 samples were obtained and examined. As a result, the following lots were purchased in the open market and found to be adulterated. In accordance with the mandatory nature of the act quoted above, publication is here made of the names and addresses of the seedsmen who sold the lots found to be adulterated, together with the percentages of adulteration in each lot.

JAMES WILSON, Secretary of Agriculture.

[United States Department of Agriculture, Office of the Secretary—Circular No. 15.]

ADULTERATION OF KENTUCKY BLUE GRASS AND ORCHARD GRASS SEED.

Seeds of Kentucky blue grass and of orchard grass have been obtained and tested in accordance with the following paragraph contained in the act of Congress making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to obtain in the open market samples of seeds of grass, clover, or alfalfa, test the same, and if any such seeds are found to be adulterated or misbranded, or any seeds of Canada blue grass (Poa compressa) are obtained under any other name than Canada blue grass or Poa compressa, to publish the results of the tests, together with the names of the persons by whom the seeds were offered for sale."

In carrying out the provisions of this act 251 samples of seed of Kentucky blue grass and 265 samples of orchard grass were obtained in the open market and examined. Of these, 41 samples of seed of Kentucky blue grass were found to be adulterated with seed of Canada blue grass, while 133 samples of orchard grass seed were found to be adulterated, the seeds most commonly used as adulterants being English rye grass and meadow fescue, the value of neither being more than one-third to one-half that of orchard grass seed. That the adulteration of orchard grass is very general is evidenced by the fact that samples containing adulterants were obtained from twenty-four States.

While Canada blue grass is imported into the United States in quantities varying from 600,000 to 700,000 pounds per annum, it is used only occasionally in this country, and it is evident that the bulk of the seed imported is sold as Kentucky blue grass.

In accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress quoted, publication is here made of the names and addresses of the seedsmen who sold the lots found to be adulterated, together with the percentages of adulteration in each lot.

ADULTERATION OF RED CLOVER SEED.

Seed of red clover has been obtained and tested in accordance with the following paragraph contained in the act of Congress making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to obtain in the open market samples of seeds of grass, clover, or alfalfa, test the same, and if any such seeds are found to be adulterated or misbranded, or any seeds of Canada blue grass (Poa compressa) are obtained under any other name than Canada blue grass or Poa compressa, to publish the results of the tests, together with the names of the persons by whom the seeds were offered for sale."

In carrying out the provisions of this act, 521 samples of seed of red clover were obtained in the open market and examined. Of these, 116 samples were found to contain seed of the destructive parasitic plant dodder, and five samples were found to be adulterated with seed of yellow trefoil.

Yellow trefoil is not used as a forage plant in the United States, but the seed is imported from Europe at about 5 cents per pound for use as an adulterant of red clover and alfalfa seed.

In accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress quoted, publication is here made of the names and addresses of the seedsmen who sold the lots found to be adulterated, together with the percentage of adulteration in each lot.

ADULTERATION OF ALFALFA SEED.

Seed of alfalfa has been obtained and tested in accordance with the following paragraph contained in the act of Congress making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to obtain in the open market samples of seeds of grass, clover, or alfalfa, test the same, and if any such seeds are found to be adulterated or misbranded, or any seeds of Canada blue grass (Poa compressa) are obtained under any other name than Canada blue grass or Poa compressa, to publish the results of the tests, together with the names of the persons by whom the seeds were offered for sale."

In carrying out the provisions of this act 352 samples of seed of alfalfa were obtained in the open market and examined. Of these, 160, or nearly one-half of the samples, were found to contain seed of the destructive parasitic plant dodder; 9 samples were found to be adulterated with seed of yellow trefoil, and 9 samples adulterated with bur clover.

clover. Yellow trefoil is not used to any extent as a forage plant in the United States, but the seed is imported from Europe at about 5 cents per pound for use as an adulterant of red clover and alfalfa seed. Although bur clover is cultivated in the Gulf States, the seed found mixed with that of alfalfa is not the commercial bur clover seed of this country, but a by-product secured in cleaning South American wool, and is imported from Germany in low-grade alfalfa seed.

In accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress quoted, publication is here made of the names and addresses of the seedsmen who offered for sale the lots found to be adulterated, together with the percentage of adulteration in each lot:

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I hope that we may be able to get through with the next paragraph in the bill before rising. Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LAMB, Mr. RUCKER, and several Members. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 59. [Applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers; and I desire to say there is no wish to take advantage of the absence of any Members; but it is Saturday afternoon and a quarter to 5 o'clock, and I think the attendance will be as full on Monday

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded. [After counting.] Tellers are ordered; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Lamb] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 71, noes 69.

So the committee determined to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Foster of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24815, the agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LATE REPRESENTATIVE JOHN H, KETCHAM.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to adopt the order which the Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, February 24, 1907, at the conclusion of the addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. H. C. Adams, shall be set apart for memorial addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. John H. KETCHAM, late a Representative from the Twenty-first Congressional district of the State of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MILITARISM IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave to print in the RECORD two protests against the growth of militarism by leading citizens of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a protest by leading citizens of the United States against the growth of militarism in

Mr. PAYNE. What is the request, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a protest from leading citizens of the United States against the growth of militarism.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, reported the bill (H. R. 24991) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other puposes; which, together with the report thereon, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve all points of order upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. There is no objection to the gentleman doing so if he desires, but the gentleman will notice that it has never been held-

Mr. MANN. It is reported in the House with a privileged report. For that reason I reserve the points of order.

The SPEAKER. That is, the gentleman reserves the points of order as they are usually reserved on appropriation bills? It is not a point against the report of the committee?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman freserves all points of order on the bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]

RETURN OF A BILL FROM THE PRESIDENT.

CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 16944) to amend section 878 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 8166) for the relief of Mattie R. West; and

A bill (S. 8167) for the relief of J. D. Eades, sr. (with accompanying papers).

He also introduced a bill (S. 8168) to correct the military record of Solomon B. Saylor; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CARMACK introduced a bill (S. 8169) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific Railway Company for transporting the United States mails; which was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims?

Mr. CARMACK. I do not care. It struck me that it ought to go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, but let it go to whatever is the appropriate committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will refer it, with the accompanying paper, to the Committee on Claims; and if the Senator should desire later a different reference it can be made.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 8170) anmending an act to create a customs district of the Territory of Arizona, approved April 29, 1890; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8171) making an appropriation for the custom-house in San Francisco, Cal., and releasing the contractor to the extent necessary to replace work or materials, and to compensate him for increase in the cost of labor and materials above the prices prevailing previous to April 18, 1906; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds

Mr. HEYBURN introduced a bill (S. 8172) granting a pension to Orlando Robbins; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 8173) to increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military

Mr. BURKETT introduced a bill (S. 8174) to incorporate a company for breeding horses on the Crow Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally ent consideration.

read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions

A bill (S. 8175) granting an increase of pension to Nancy C. Baxter; and

A bill (S. 8176) granting an increase of pension to Jake Holestone (with accompanying papers)

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 8177) for the relief of the president and managers of the Union Society (Bethesda Orphan House) of Savannah, Ga.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HEMENWAY introduced a bill (S. 8178) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John C. Partlow; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 8179) for the relief of Lieut. Commander Kenneth McAlpine, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8180) to protect the monuments already erected on the battlefields of Bull Run, Va., and other monuments that may be there erected; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8181) authorizing the placing of Capt. Carter P. Johnson, Tenth United States Cavalry, on the retired list, with the rank and pay of a major; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 8182) authorizing the Twin City Power Company to build two dams across the Savannah River above the city of Augusta, in the State of Georgia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on

Mr. BEVERIDGE introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8183) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Moore; and

A bill (S. 8184) granting an increase of pension to Peter B. Kellenberger

Mr. PILES introduced a bill (S. 8185) granting a pension to Elisha Painter; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 8186) to construct and place a light-ship at or near Ohio Shoal, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 8187) for relief of the estate of Rebecca E. Sexton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 8188) authorizing certain changes in the permanent system of highways in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 8189) granting to the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway Company, a corporation, the right to construct, maintain, and operate a single track railway across the lands of the United States in the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 21, township 14 north, range 6 west of the fifth principal meridian, in the county of Independence and State of Arkansas, reserved for use in connection with the construction of Lock No. 1, Upper White River, Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment granting an extension of time to the homestead settlers on ceded Indian reservations in Minnesota in which to make payments thereon, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL,

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BOARD ON GEOGRAPHIC NAMES.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be ordered to print and bind 2,500 copies of the third report of the United States Board on Geographic Names for the use of the Board.

CHARLES S. HANKS-RAILROAD STATISTICS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer a resolution, and ask for its pres-

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas according to press accounts Charles S. Hanks, in a recent address delivered before the Boston Chamber of Commerce, said, among other things:

"Since last June I have been at work in Washington at the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I have spent several thousand dollars of the good money of the United States in clerical services to show that the freight and passenger rates of this country can be reduced 10 per cent without affecting the dividends on the stock of any railroad or the wages of any employee. In connection with this work certain other facts have come to my attention which may interest you."

Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, directed—

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, directed—

1. To inform the Senate whether said Charles S. Hanks is employed in any capacity in connection with said Commission; and if so, in what capacity, by whom employed, and from what appropriation he is paid.

2. To send to the Senate a full statement of the facts found by said Hanks which show or tend to show that the freight and passenger rates can be reduced as stated by him in said address.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would suggest to the Senator from Texas that he add a clause to his resolution calling for the names of all other employees

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not desire that. The resolution is based upon an address delivered by this gentleman in which he stated that he had been at work at the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that there were such facts which had come to his knowledge as he indicated that the rates on passengers and freight could be reduced 10 per cent. This address was delivered before the Chamber of Commerce in the city of Boston, and the purpose of the resolution is to secure those facts, if they have been reported to the Commission, and also to discover the capacity, if any, in which this gentleman served the Commission. I wish to know that in order to see what importance or authority to attach to his findings.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I do not object at all to the resolution of the Senator from Texas. I think it is quite proper and quite pertinent. But there have been stories floating about that there was a large force employed by somebody in examinations of this character, and I should be glad to have not only the names of the employees, but the information which they have gathered from various sources. I think it is due to us, who are engaged more or less in the work of legislating in this direction, that we should have all the information, especially information which is gathered by Government employees, for our benefit in legislation. Therefore I suggested that perhaps the resolution should be enlarged in its scope.

Mr. CULBERSON. I would have no objection to voting for a resolution submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island covering that point, but I trust he will allow this resolution to be considered this morning and passed.

Mr. HALE. Allow me to make a suggestion to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The statement made by this man as to what he had been doing and his expending of the Government money in certain directions is quite a remarkable statement, and I think we ought to have information upon that point, how much and for what purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. And from what appropriations?

Mr. HALE. And, as the Senator from Iowa says, from what appropriations. That information can be gotten speedily from the Commission. There is no reason why a reply to this part of it should not be sent to the Senate, so that we may have it during the remnant of the session.

But when the Senator comes to the other proposition, that the Commission shall report upon the great subject of reducing rates 10 per cent, I am afraid if we embody that in the resolution and connect it with the other, we will not get a report from the Interstate Commerce Commission at all during this session, because that will open a very wide door; it will open a new examination and involve a great deal of labor on the part of the Commission.

I do not object to the resolution; I should like to have the report; but I suggest to the Senator whether he had better not divide his resolution and let the resolution that calls for information about the performances of this man stand by itself, so that we can have it very early. I think we ought to have it Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the resolution does not ask the Commission to send here all the facts in its possession on this very important subject, but to send only such as have been collected by this particular official, if he in fact be an official.

HALE. Will not the Senator read that part of the resolution?

Mr. CULBERSON (reading):

Second. To send to the Senate a full statement of the facts found by said Hanks which show, or tend to show, that the freight and passenger rates can be reduced as stated by him in said address.

It is confined to a report or reports which may have been made to the Commission by Mr. Hanks.

Mr. HALE. I see; I did not observe it on the reading of the resolution at the desk. If that will not so extend the scope of the inquiry and investigation of the Commission that we can not get it all at an early day, as we ought to have it, I think the resolution is right. We ought to have the information. A statement of that kind ought to be known to Congress and the facts ought to be sent here. If the Senator does not think that calling, as the resolution does, for what this man has brought out will delay an answer to the resolution, I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I shall not object to the resolution, but it seems to me this man has been a very industrious individual, if since last June he has made investigations that enable him to say that the rates for freight and passenger traffic on all the railroads of the United States can be reduced 10 per cent. It is a most remarkable statement for any man to make. I have no idea that he has ascertained anything of the kind, and yet it may be well enough for us to see what this Mr. Hanks has discovered.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I do not know Mr. Hanks personally, but I have heard something of his employment. My impression is that he is not employed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that he is not paid from their appropriations, but paid from the appropriations for either the Department of Justice or the Department of Commerce and Labor. If I am right in that supposition, the resolution of the Senator from Texas will fail of results, as he makes inquiry of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I would suggest that he will probably come nearer getting the information on both subjects if he asks the question of the President of the United States.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I have no special knowledge of this matter except as gleaned from the newspapers. This gentleman is reported to have said:

Since last June I have been at work in Washington at the Inter-state Commerce Commission.

I do not know exactly what he means; and the purpose of the resolution is to find out where he is working, by whom he is employed, and what facts he has ascertained in the inquiry made by him.

I trust that there will be no objection to the consideration and passage of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE FUNCTIONS AND RESERVED STATE RIGHTS.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Thursday, January 31, after the completion of the routine morning business I will, with the permission of the Senate, call up Senate resolution 199, on the question of executive usurpation, for the purpose of submitting some remarks.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7034) to incorporate the International Sunday School Association of America, which were, on page 2, line 7, after "real," to insert "estate not exceeding $1,000,000 in value in the aggregate;" and on page 4, after line 3, to insert "Sec. 9. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is reserved."

Mr. McCREARY. I move that the Senate concur in the two amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CODE OF LAW FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 16944) to amend section 878 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 24285. An act to provide for holding terms of United States courts at Clarksdale, Miss., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 24603. An act to authorize the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Coosa River in the State of Alabama, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

POTOMAC RIVER BEIDGE AT SHEPHERDSTOWN, W. VA.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24111) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Potomac River, at or near Shepherdstown, W. Va.

I will state, by permission, that a bill almost similar has passed the Senate and gone to the House, and this bill has passed the House and come to the Senate. The only difference is that, under the operation of this bill, the company must commence the construction of the bridge in one year, while under the other in two years. The Senate bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill. I am very glad not to object to its consideration, but hope that after it is disposed of the consideration of no further bills will be asked, as I wish to make my remarks.

Mr. DANIEL. I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

sure it will take no time.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAL-LAND ENTRIES IN ALASKA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, at the last session I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 17415) to authorize the assignees of coal-land locations to make entry under the coal-land laws applicable to Alaska was passed. I should like now to call up that motion, and I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be now recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SPOONER. I now move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands,

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin is that a bill affecting coal lands in Alaska?

Mr. SPOONER. It is.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then ought it not to be referred to the Committee on Territories?

Mr. SPOONER. I think not. It was reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That may be; but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Committee on Territories are now considering a bill on that subject,

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SPOONER. It is by the courtesy of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge], as I understand, that I obtained the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it seems to me that this bill should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, if this matter is going to lead to debate, I shall withdraw my suggestion; but I wish to call attention to the fact as being important, though I shall not press it at this time, that such laws as exist in reference to mining and to coal mines and coal lands in Alaska already have been considered by the Committee on Territories. We now have before our committee for consideration, and shall undoubtedly at the next meeting report out, a bill affecting that very subject. It seems to me that we ought to have this matter concentrated in some committee.

Mr. SPOONER. As an original proposition, that perhaps might be true, but the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana comes on the last day, after the settlement. The truth is that this bill came from the House of Representatives after having been considered by the Committee on Public Lands; it was referred by the Senate to the Committee on Public Lands here, was considered and amended by that committee, and it was committed to my friend from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], a member of that committee, to report it to the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I withdraw my suggestion. Let it go this time; but do not do it again.

Mr. SPOONER. I now move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator fram Idaho?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the matter go over, unless we are going to take time enough now to determine what committee is to consider this measure and other bills of this class. there is any class of legislation that should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining, it seems to me it is that pertaining to coal mines and other classes of mining. All such bills should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining. The Committee on Public Lands is constituted primarily for the consideration of matters pertaining to the public domain other than mining matters. It seems to me, I repeat, that this should go to the Commitee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think, as the Senator from Wisconsin states, that this bill ought to go now to the Committee on Public Lands, as that committee practically already has it in charge. Otherwise I should insist on its going to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SPOONER. I may say, Mr. President, that my motionif the Senator from Indiana will pardon me a moment—is that this bill go to the Committee on Public Lands, that they may consider in connection with it, it being a House bill, the recommendation made by the President, which involves the publicland service as well as the coal and other nonmineral phases of the subject. I think my friend from Idaho had better make the point hereafter as to other measures which are more exclusively and palpably within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Mines and Mining, if he will pardon the suggestion.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it has been my intention for some time to see if I could not induce the Senate to believe that all questions relative to the mining of coal, iron, or the precious or valuable metals should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining. It was because of the very suggestions made by the Senator that I rose to make the remarks that I have made.

The message of the President referred to by the Senator, I take it, is the one which recommends the leasing of coal lands. That means the leasing of the right to extract the coal. So far as the surface of the land under which the coal may lie is concerned, I would not think it important that that branch of the matter should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining; but when it pertains to the question strictly in regard to the mining of coal, I think that committee should begin now to have jurisdiction of every measure that comes here involving the question of extracting the useful or valuable metals or substances from the soil. That is mining.

Mr. SPOONER. Bills have been pending before the Committee on Public Lands which are intended to enable the Government to retain, in the public interests, a certain control over the mining of coal, without interfering at all with the develop-ment of the public-land States so far as the surface is concerned, contemplating the disposition of the surface for agricultural purposes, but reserving to the Government the right as to the disposition of the coal and oil and similar nonmineral substances or deposits. That, of course, covers mining, not in the technical sense in which the Senator refers to it, but incidentally; and it covers also the surface. So it seems to me an entirely proper thing that this bill should go to the Committee on Public Lands. It is the committee which, without objection from the Committee on Mines and Mining, took jurisdiction of it and dealt with it, and I am simply moving to send it back to the committee whence it came, in order that they may reconsider it, and also consider in connection with it the bills introduced by my friend from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] and other Senators, which involve the disposition of the surface, which would not be within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Mines and Mining, and, incidentally, the other phases of the subject.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would inquire of the Senator is it not a fact that this bill went to the Committee on Public Lands before the President presented to the Senate, in a message now upon our table, the question of leasing the coal lands?

Mr. SPOONER. But it does not contain anything now that it did not when it went there, and the Senator did not object to it going there.

Mr. HEYBURN. It did not seem necessary at that time to object to the reference, because the bill did not involve the question of mining. But I will suggest to the Senator that, if the bill is reported again along the lines suggested in the President's message in regard to the leasing of these lands, it should have incorporated in it every feature necessary to provide for the safety of miners working in the mines, for the method of mining, the limitations, and everything pertaining to the manner of mining. That belongs to the Committee on Mines the manner of mining. and Mining.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it must be apparent to the Senate that this bill ought to go to the committee whence it came, and that my motion is the proper motion.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this bill came from the Committee on Public Lands of the other House and was considered by the Committee on Public Lands of this body. It involves not only the matter of mining, but what disposition is to be made of the surface lands. In that view of the case, I think, under present contingencies, the bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, whence it came.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate

the bill indicated by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I began my remarks on last Wednesday by showing the appalling figures of the official census concerning child labor in the United States and by showing further that, startling as these figures are, they are far below the truth. I gave some items of this kind, of which perhaps the most conclusive were the census figures from Maryland, where something over 5,000 children were reported, and where, under the new law, already, within six months, children to more than twice the census figures are shown to be working in that State. This is proved by the following affidavit from the assistant chief of the bureau of statistics and information of the State of Maryland, which I send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Maryland Bureau of Statistics and Information,

Baltimore, Md., January 24, 1907.

This is to certify that the Maryland bureau of statistics and information has, since July 1, issued upward of 10,000 permits to work to children between 12 and 16 years of age, who could pass the test of reading and writing simple sentences in the English language, working in the stores, offices, workshops, and manufacturing establishments of this State. That the said office has rejected application for permits of about 1,200 children who were disqualified either by ignorance or physical disability.

J. G. Schonfarber.

J. G. SCHONFARBER, Assistant to Chief, Bureau of Statistics.

STATE OF MARYLAND, City of Baltimore, to wit:

Be it remembered that on this 24th day of January, 1907, before the subscriber, a justice of the peace in and for the State of Maryland and Baltimore City, personally appeared J. G. Schonfarber, and made oath in due form of law that the aforegoing statement is true.

[SEAL.]

OSCAR C. MARTENET, Justice of the Peace.

CENSUS GIVES ONLY OVER 10 YEARS OF AGE,

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, another proof of the inadequacy of the census figures is the fact that they do not assume to give any children employed under the age of 10. The census enumerators were not instructed to return children under 10. I showed on last Wednesday that a vast number of children, giving, as examples, names, places, and ages, in the glass factories of New Jersey and of West Virginia and on the coal breakers of Pennsylvania and elsewhere were at work below 10 years of age. Before I am through with the presentation of the evidence in this case—because that is what it amounts to, evidence in a case—I shall show that large numbers elsewhere, particularly in the cotton mills of the South, are at work, some of them at an age as low as 5 years; that in the sweatshops of some of the Northern States children are at work at an age as low as 3 years. Yet few, if any, of these were included in the census figures and none were sought for. I give this by way of recapitulation.

Now I shall continue Mr. Durland's testimony. I presented his affidavit last Wednesday as to the truth of all he says.

Mr. President, I may further state, for the benefit of those who on last Wednesday afternoon during our session were absent at luncheon, that I am sustaining each statement made as to facts by the affidavit of the person who investigated them. I am not taking the course usually taken in the Senate of merely making statements that have been set forth in magazines or newspapers or heard by somebody, but I am supporting them all by affidavit; and I am doing this because I know that every fact in support of this great reform will be questioned, if not denied, just as every proposition of law will at first be declared to be heresy.

It is said that certain interests are even now at work opposing this bill. Three-fourths of the cotton factories of the Southern States are determined that it shall be defeated—not all of them, Mr. President, for, I thank God, there are some mill owners in the South who would rather have less money and more conscience, who employ children only because their competitors do, and who pray for the passage of this bill. But it is safe to say that three-quarters of that tremendous industry, the extent of which you may see by looking at the map on my left, will resist this measure—are resisting right now.

It is said that the great Southern Railway system, which is set out on the map in red and a large part of whose business and a good fraction of whose profits come from these cotton mills, is also against this or any similar reform. It is said that the enormous coal industries of Pennsylvania, as shown on the map farther toward the door, with their immense power, and the railroads that gridiron that portion of the State and that carry the product of those mines—the Pennsylvania, the Lehigh Valley, the Delaware and Lackawanna, and the Delaware and Hudson-will also oppose it.

And these are not all. As this debate proceeds if it becomes necessary, indeed, if I have time and the geographer has time, other maps will be presented showing the location of other industries and the extent of other interests which will fight this great reform.

Therefore I tell Senators who were at luncheon the other day that I am supporting what is here presented by the oath of the person who made the investigation. I intend to continue this morning at some length in completing the case as to the evidence.

I intended to take, Mr. President, a good deal of time, because we are told that this whole matter was a vast exaggeration, that the extent of child labor is not nearly so great as earnest and sympathetic persons were stating it to be, and that the allegations of cruelty were not borne out by the facts.

So, the first thing necessary is to bring to the attention of the Senate and the country, and to repeat and repeat to the point of iteration, the facts in the case, every one of them being susceptible of proof in a court of justice. Then, when the facts are before us and the country knows the extent of this infamy and what it means now and in the future, we will have a sound basis upon which to act. And the country can judge us if we

I see some Senators here who were not here the other day when I read Mr. Lovejoy's statement from the Outlook. I suppose it is not necessary for me to say that, in the absence of an affidavit, any article printed in the Outlook carries weight with the American people, because it has the personal indorsement of its editor, that great American moralist and publicist known and honored by all the civilized world, Dr. Lyman Abbott. But I have not even depended on that; I support every statement by the oath of the person who makes it.

ANOTHER DESCRIPTION OF THE BREAKERS.

Now I shall read a few of the concrete illustrations: and since we have been on the subject of the coal breakers of Pennsylvania, concerning which I read at considerable length last Wednesday, perhaps we had better complete that. But before I do, Mr. President, I wish to read one sentence from an editorial in the New York Sun of last Friday, entitled, "Mr. Beverender on good and bad States." It is not necessary to read the whole editorial—I will try to answer fully later on its arguments against this bill—but this particular sentence from the Sun's editorial should be read at this juncture and borne in mind by every Senator and every American, as I read the descriptions, sworn to, of the child labor this bill will abolish. The New York Sun, speaking of these children this bill is intended to rescue and arguing against the bill itself says:

It is likely enough that many of these child laborers will grow up into capitalists and become "too rich," like their present oppressors—

That is the opinion of that paper. As I read the condition of these children in the coal breakers of Pennsylvania, in the cotton mills of the South, in the cotton mills of Maine, in the glass works of West Virginia, and in the sweatshops of New Jersey you will see the material out of which our future "capitalists," according to this paper, are to be made. Here is Mr. Durland's description of the breakers:

When the coal comes up out of the mines it is sent to the towering breakers and run through a series of sifting and sorting troughs, astride of which the boys sit, their little backs bent over the streams of moving coal, as with their bare hands they pick the stone and refuse from the good coal. The fingers soon become scarred and calloused and their nails worn or broken to the quick. The breaker atmosphere becomes impenetrable. Fine particles of coal dust fill the air and are taken into the lungs with every breath. This is the dark cloud that hovers like a pall above every dry breaker in the anthracite region.

The tissues of the boys' lungs gather the black specks until the whole lung is discolored, and I have seen boys who have been away from the breakers and mines for cight and even ten years cough up these particles whenever they were attacked by a slight cold.

Experiment has shown that the work of the breaker boys can be done by machinery. Automatic slate pickers have been demonstrated to be practicable. Flesh and blood are at present deemed cheaper commodities than iron and steel, and the State permits the boys to do this work at 14.

GIRLS WORK IN SILK MILLS OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Now Mr. Durland takes up the silk mills. He says:

Now Mr. Durland takes up the silk mills. He says:

Less kindly is the State toward the girls. They may work at 13 years: They may work at tecleve-hour shifts by day or by night. Their work is often in a warm, moist atmosphere, out of which they pass into the chill dawn of winter mornings. They must stand at their work. They must be unceasingly diligent lest an unnoticed broken strand of silk entangle others and damage the work.

They are unprotected from moral dangers shocking almost beyond credence. The State has refused to protect these children because the abolition of child labor at night would necessitate the remodeling of certain industrial plants, and the citizens of the State bow to the wishes of the manufacturers in this matter as quietly as if it were a moot point, complicated by subtle technicalities. The moral phase of the matter is completely subjugated to the pecuniary.

"I deplore this business as much as you do," a silk-mill owner said to me one day, "but I am part of a great industrial system, and so long as the system exists I must run my mill as other mills are run." The gentleman had come to me to beg that I keep silent on what I had seen in his mill the previous night. The foreman in charge, with more kindliness than business discretion, had allowed me to go through the mill with absolute carte blanche. When I saw a small girl whose thin features and lusterless eyes attracted my attention, I asked her age.

"Eleven mast, sir" she answered.

"Eleven past, sir," she answered.
"How long have you worked in the mill?"
"Two years." So she began at 9 years, and in a State right next to us where the law fixes the limit at 13.

Do you always work night shift?-

Night shift, mind you-

Yes, sir: all the time.
A little boy was working over a loom a few feet off.
"How old are you, my boy?" I asked.
"Fourteen past, sir."
I should not have thought him more than 11.

Now, let us see the conditions under which they are working. Of course these are not our children. They are the children of somebody else that are working twelve hours a night. If they were our children, we would forget lunch and not sit up nights contriving arguments to show that the Constitution won't let us rescue them.

Mr. Durland continues:

The perpetual click of the rattling looms, the whirr of belts, the crunch and rumble of wheels made a deafening din. The looms moved so regularly that I found my eyes easily tired watching them. It needed only a few moments of fixed gazing to appreciate the story told by one little girl who had had to quit the mill.

I ask the attention of every Senator in the Chamber to this, because it is typical. Said this child:

"The tangles were always worst when I was tiredest. I had to twist back the reel for a long, long time until all the tangles were gone. The big girl who had charge of our department often scolded me, and sometimes the man who was night superintendent told me he would discharge me if I couldn't do better. Then my head would ache something awful, and I would have to cry, and some other girl would straighten out the tangle."

Another one employed in a mill near Scranton, who had been transferred to day shift, said:

"When I first went to work at night the long standing hurt me very much. My feet burned so that I cried. My knees hurt me worse than my feet, and my back pained all the time."

I stop here to remark that this is no occasional instance. It is typical and common.

Mother cried when I told her how I suffered, and that made me feel so badly that I did not tell her any more. It does not hurt me so much now, but I feel tired all the time. I do not feel near as tired, though, as I did when I worked all night.

My eyes hurt me, too, from watching the threads at night. The doctor said they would be ruined if I did not stop the night work. After watching the threads for a long time I could see threads every-

A little girl 9 years old, mind you, went through this-

When I looked at other things there were threads running across them. Sometimes I felt as though the threads were cutting my eyes.

No wonder. She had been working twelve hours at night, looking at the ceaseless play of the threads; she was 9 years old; she had been standing on her feet; and this is going on in a country about which we make earnest and passionate Fourth-of-July orations.

But Mr. Durland says that-Bad as this aspect is, there is another, a sadder and more terrible feature. The close atmosphere of the factory rooms in the dead of night tends to stupefy the children. To freshen them and drive the natural drowsiness away they are encouraged to spend their midnight half hour running in the open air.

Mark that humanity. The silk mills really give the children a half hour for luncheon at midnight. I hope American women will think of all these things when they put on their silks. Mr. Durland goes on:

The mills usually occupy isolated sites. They are often on the edge of a mining village, sometimes by the banks of the Susquehanna, or near the foot of the hills. Open fields and shadowy woods surround

And then occurs a statement which I prefer not to read, but which every Senator will quickly infer.

I shall read from another article in the Outlook. davit is among my papers here some place. I assure Senators I have it. It will be presented and will appear in the Record. This is a continuation of the description of this evil. Here is the affidavit, and I ask that it be read from the Clerk's desk:

This is to certify that Rev. Peter Roberts, Ph. D., of Mahanoy City, Pennsylvania, appeared before me this day, February 5, 1907, and, being duly sworn, affirms that the facts, conversations, and interviews as set forth in his article on the question of "Child Labor in Eastern Pennsylvania," which appeared in the Outlook, a weekly magazine published in New York City, the issue of December 7, 1904, are true to the best of his knowledge and belief. To whom it may concern:

Rev. Peter Roberts, Ph. D., 517 E. Center Street, Mahanoy City, Pa. Sworn to before me this 5th day of February, A. D. 1907. [Seal.] Justice of the Peace.

My commission expires first Monday in May, 1910.

MORE EXAMPLES OF GIRLS' WORK IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Says Doctor Roberts:

Ten or fifteen years ago night work for girls was unknown in this

This is Pennsylvania-

Ten or fifteen years ago night work for girls was unknown in this State. The evil arose when the silk-throwing plants were built in anthracite communities; and as these enterprises multiply, the number of tender children employed at night increases.

So you see we are not talking about something that is old. We are talking about a new and increasing evil. If the census-figures showing 750,000 children at work in other occupations than agriculture be correct—and I have shown that they are far beneath the truth—the increase since 1900 would make to-day over 1,500,000 children engaged in something else than agriculture.

Says Doctor Roberts:

A plant in Dickson City, employing some 300 hands, draws its labor supply from a radius of 2 miles, and young girls not 16 years of age work twelve hours for five nights in the week. When an employer was asked "Do they work as well by night as by day?" he answered, "No: they don't sleep in the day, and when midnight comes they get drowsy"—

Children working on their feet all night How extraordinary! get drowsy! How indolent of the children-

"and the waste is larger." I saw little girls going to and fro before scores of revolving spindles, having their short dresses tied with a cord to keep them from being entangled in the machinery as they stretched on tiptoe to catch the broken thread.

And these little girls in short dresses, standing before these whirlers—some of them making 25,000 revolutions a minute—from 6 p. m. to 6 a. m., get dronesy. It means more waste—the waste of nerve and tissue of future mothers in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania sylvania.

Future mothers, you know, of the "capitalists" of the New York Sun's prophecy

I shall refer to the book again upon another phase of the subject.

MR, NICHOLS'S ACCOUNT OF THE BREAKERS.

Now I will read the only article I shall read which will not be supported by an affidavit, and the reason of that is that the writer is dead. It is an article entitled "Children of the Coal writer is dead. It is an article entitled "Children of the Coal Shadow," by Francis H. Nichols, in McClure's. He also adds his testimony to Mr. Lovejoy's, Mr. Durland's, and Mr. Spargo's about the work of boys on breakers and just what that work means:

After being ground in heavy machinery in the cupola of the breaker, the broken coal flows down a series of chutes to the ground floor, where it is loaded on freight cars waiting to receive it. The chutes zigzag through the building, about 3 feet apart. Between them, in tiers, are nailed a series of planks; these serve as seats for the "slate pickers." Mixed with the coal are pieces of slate rock, which it is the duty of the slate picker to detect as they pass him and to throw into another chute which passes to the refuse heap below.

A few of the slate pickers are white-haired old men, superannuated or crippled miners who are no longer able to blast coal below ground, and who, for the sake of a dollar a day, pass their last years in the breaker; but an overwhelming majority in all the breakers are boys. All day long their little fingers dip into the unending grimy stream that rolls past them.

The coal so closely resembles slate that it can be detected only by the closest scrutiny, and the childish faces are compelled to bend so low over the chutes that prematurely round shoulders and narrow chests are the inevitable result. In front of the chutes is an open space reserved for the "breaker boss"—

Senators who heard the evidence given the other day will re-

Senators who heard the evidence given the other day will remember that both Mr. Spargo and Mr. Lovejoy testified that the boss sat some distance back with a stick in his hand and occasionally, with a piece of slate or coal, spurred the boys on to greater effort. "By a multitude of witnesses," says the

The boss is armed with a stick, with which he occasionally raps on the head and shoulders a boy who betrays lack of zeal. This is in the head and shoulders a boy who betrays tack of zeat. This is in America, you know.

The breakers are supposed to be heated in winter, and a steam pipe winds up the wall, but in cold weather every pound of steam is needed in the mines, so that the amount of heat that radiates from the steam pipe is not sufficient to be taken seriously by any of the breakers' tollers.

From November until May a breaker boy always wears a cap and tippet and overcoat, if he possesses one, but because he has to rely largely upon the sense of touch he can not cover his finger tips with mittens or gloves. From the chafing of the coal his lingers sometimes bleed, and his nails are worn down to the quick.

The hours of toil for slate pickers are supposed to be from 7 in the morning until noon and from 1 to 6 in the afternoon; but when the colliery is running on "full-capacity orders" the noon recess is reduced to half an hour, and the good-night whistle does not blow until half past 6. For his eleven hours' work the breaker boy gets no more pay than for ten. past 6. For than for ten.

Mr. CARMACK. About what are the ages of these boys?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator evidently was not here Wednesday. I have not attempted to recapitulate all that testimony. I then read an article supported by the affidavit of Mr. Lovejoy, giving the names and ages of the children. They range all the way from 8 years up to 14 years, all of that being a violation of law; and I am coming to the age.

The writer goes on and describes how difficult it is to get any of them to say anything about it, because they think it is the inspector perhaps, or something of that kind, and they do not want to betray their fraudulent certificates. But he got into communication with the boys through a labor union.

communication with the boys through a labor union.

For this reason my inquiries of mine boys as to their work and ages were always conducted under the sacred auspices of the union.

The interrogative colloquy was invariably something like this:

"How old are you?"

BOY. "Thirteen, going on 14."

SECRETARY OF THE LOCAL. "On the level, now, this is union business.

You can speak free, understand."

BOY. "Oh, dat's a diffurnt t'ing altogether. I'm 9 years old. I've been working since my fadder got hurted in th' explosion in No. 17 a year ago last October."

A system of compulsory registration of births, such as exists in most of the other States of the Union, might settle the question of the ages of the children, but, strangely enough, such does not exist in the State of Pennsylvania. Without some such source of evidence, notaries and inspectors, knowing to a moral certainty the perjury, can prove nothing.

I send to the desk and ask to have read an affidavit. I call

I send to the desk and ask to have read an affidavit. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this affidavit is made by a school-teacher now living and teaching in Washington, who taught a school near one of the breakers and later on taught a school in New Jersey, and she made personal observations con-cerning the facts to which she testifies.

Without objection, the Secretary The VICE-PRESIDENT.

Miss Olive G. Murphy personally appeared before me, a notary public, who on eath says she has taught in the public schools of Dickson City, Pa., a town 6 miles from Scranton, Pa.

During the strike the breaker boys came to her primary school. She then realized how little these boys had been in school.

They were between 9 and 12 years of age, and were in a class of children 6 and 7 years of age. The breaker boys were not able to read in the first reader or write their names, which proved to her that they had been working before the age limit.

The boys not only lost the education which is due to them, but their health was impaired by breathing the coal dust, injuring their lungs; working in darkness, injuring their eyes; position while working, giving them cramped bodies.

She has lived in Scranton and has seen the home life, which told her that school was the only place where the miner's child could receive an education to fit him to become an American citizen.

She saw in Paterson, N. J., at Barber's linen mill, the small girls outside with wet clothing, as if they had been out in the pouring rain. The work in this mill is not fit for any child, especially the small girls who work there.

CHILD LABOR IN MAINE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

I, Arthur F. Cushman, of Auburn, in the county of Androscoggin and State of Maine, on oath say that the facts stated in the article appearing in the Lewiston Evening Journal, of Lewiston, Me., on Saturday, June 16, 1906, entitled "Child Labor in the Lewiston Mills," and signed by me, were at that time true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

And I, on oath, do further say that the facts stated in the article appearing in the Maine Magazine of November, 1906, entitled "Child Slaves of Maine," and written by me, were at that time true to the best of my knowledge and belief, and that the photographs appearing in said last-mentioned article were taken by me under the conditions described therein.

ARTHUR F. CUSHMAN. LEWISTON, January 10, 1907.

STATE OF MAINE, Androscoggin, 88:

Subscribed and sworn to before me.

RALPH W. CROCKETT, Notary Public.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The extract which I wish to read from Mr. Cushman's article in the Maine Magazine is as follows:

Mr. Cushman's article in the Maine Magazine is as follows:

There are 2,000 children, 14 years of age and under, working in the cotton and woolen mills and shops of Maine. That is my estimate, made after careful consideration of the data I have myself gathered. It is substantiated by the investigations of half a dozen honest men and women who have thrown their time, energy, and means into the work. Indeed, the labor unions constitute the only body of men who have presented a consistent front against this slaughter of children's tender bodies and innocent souls.

Two thousand children!

This number is constantly increasing. The increase is more noticed in the number of girls employed.

Over half of these attend no school throughout the year. Some of them, even as young as 11 years of age, have spent their last day in school.

Lewiston and Auburn alone furnish three-quarters of a thousand of these unfortunate children, and a more sickly, pinched, dull-eyed, and colorless cheeked gathering of little tots can not be found outside our

An attempt has been made by the mill managements in times past deny these facts and figures, but in the face of the evidence I have my disposal they dare not now repeat that denial over their own signatures

There was, I believe, a denial of some of these statements, and almost at the same time the Lewiston Journal of April 16, 1906, published a description of the killing of Francis Russell, who was a boy of 11 years of age working in the mill. There was no denying that boy's age. I have the Lewiston Journal's account of the accident.

Mr. Cushman published in the Lewiston Journal a rather extensive article, from which I extract merely the bare statements of fact. He says:

of fact. He says:

It is not my purpose to make any statements here that can not be substantiated by the actual data in black and white, which I have at my disposal. After perhaps the most careful investigation regarding child labor ever made in this community, an investigation covering nine months of persistent effort, from June, 1905, to March of the present year, an investigation that has brought me into close touch with the home life, the street life, and the mill life of these children of poverty, an investigation itself following nearly three years of careful, open-minded observation—after all this I am prepared to say that here in Lewiston, in five of these million-dollar cotton mills, human lives are being blotted and crushed, human ambitions are being stifled and drowned, human souls are being starved, poisoned, destroyed, not because these children are not smart, not because they are not good, not because they are not willing to work, but because mill owners must prind their dividends out of the flesh and blood, out of the intellects and souls, not of grown men, not always even of women, but of children.

Starting with the summer vacation for 1905, a systematic division of territory, a careful study of conditions and subsequent laying of plans occupied the time through_the rest of June and through July to the 1st of August. I have thought it best to observe absolute secrecy in pursuing this work.

This has been a success. It has allowed me to associate with mill help with never a suspicion of my purpose. I have entered into their lives; I have studied them, their motives, their incentives; I have won their confidences.

Beginning with August I visited in succession each of the upward of thirty mill gates, some of them twice and some three times. At these gates, while the help were passing in and out, I have taken a "census."

It should be borne in mind that these figures are without value, almost, unless I have been able to tell pretty nearly, upon casual observation, about how old a mill child is. I would only say that I have cultivated the acquaintance of these children for what is now over three years. You have passed a law that no cigarettes shall be sold to boys under 14 years of age, and you leave it with the dealer to estimate the ages of his youthful customers. You allow no liquors to be sold to minors, but you leave it with the city liquor agent to guess how old his applicants are. With fully as much care and discrimination—with, perhaps, even more care and discrimination—I have estimated the ages of these child workers as they have passed before me, in and out of their daytime prisons. I may have made mistakes, perhaps serious mistakes, but I have made generous allowances, and as I review the results of these nine months of work I fully believe that if my figures are far from correct, it is because they are too low rather than too high.

Then he proceeds to give the mills in detail and the gates by

Then he proceeds to give the mills in detail and the gates by numbers and the children and the ages of the children found at each, and that, of course, is too long either to have read or to spread at length in the Record. The summary is what we care about.

Now, the figures given above indicate about 467 boys and girls seemingly under 15 years old employed during vacations in the public schools. Figures do not tell the story of tired eyes, wasted, pinched bodies, drooping heads, and dragging feet. We may say that there are very nearly or quite half a thousand of these children laborers, and yet the meaning of these statistics will hardly dawn upon us. Out of all of them, as they have passed before me, I doubt if I could have picked out half a hundred of them whom I would not place under a doctor's care were they children of mine. Whether this widespread anemia, which often ends in consumption, is due to sustained overwork, which no child's stomach is able to make up in nourishment, or whether it is due to undernournishment from cheap or adulterated food which it is ever the lot of the children of the poverty stricken to eat, I do not ever the lot of the children of the poverty stricken to eat, I do not care to say.

I will state the situation as I, personally, have found it. However, the mortality among these children must be great. I have heard United States statistics quoted to the effect that the average child under 15 who goes to work in the mill averages to live but five years, but have been unable to get a copy of these figures. Doctors who practice in southern mill districts, where hours are longer, place the average at three or four years. In Maine, where the hours of work are only eleven a day and where the climate is colder and dryer, the children would live much longer than this on the average. Many of them live to raise families. But what children are theirs!

Returning again to the facts that I, personally, have been witness to, I desire to state further that the 467 boys and girls given in the above table are about one-half of the actual number of boys and girls working in the mills who are yet, as we may say, in short trousers or short dresses.

The rest of this article I shall refer to on the question of the nonenforcement of law when I come to that topic.

THE CHILDREN OF FOREIGNERS.

Thus far, Mr. President, these items, uninteresting perhaps to Senators, but of infinite consequence to this nation, have concerned foreign children more than American children. names which I read the other day in Mr. Lovejoy's article indicated that they were foreigners, that they were Slavs and Italians and Hungarians. (This extract is inserted hereafter under head of "Nonenforcement of Laws.") Anybody who has Anybody who has made a study of the situation knows that this is also true in the New England States. In Maine, in New Hampshire, in Vermont, immense numbers of foreigners—French, Russians, Canadians, and Slavs-have gone into the mill towns and are at work.

But that does not decrease my sympathy, if I was taking this up as a matter of sympathy, which I am not. I am interested in this matter not only from the point of view of sympathy for these children, but for the future of this Republic. All of us have seen growing within the last ten or fifteen years a class which men of all parties concede to be very dangerous to free institutions; and that that class shall not increase as it is now increasing, but that it shall be exterminated is the chief concern in the consideration of this bill.

But even if it were only sympathy, my sympathy is as broad for the child of the foreign immigrant as it is for the child of an American.

Mr. President, the children of foreigners, if they have a chance, make admirable American citizens. I wish every Senator who doubts this might read a remarkable article in the American Magazine some three months ago, entitled "A mother of Americans," and citing merely the cold facts without adornment. It told of how a young Lithuanian woman and her husband had gone to Chicago, and described the magnificent children they reared and the splendid citizens of this Republic which these "foreign" parents' sacrifice and toil and love of liberty, which brought them to this country, had produced in their children.

"Foreigners?" I suppose we were all "foreigners" once. I have no patience with the narrow view that some of us monopolize all the real and original humanity of the world. These people who come here make in the course of one generation admirable citizens if their bodies are not broken and their souls are not crushed and their minds are not stunted in the meantime. And when you do that to any children, whether they are Americans or "foreigners," you have spoiled citizenship and ruined human life.

But now, Mr. President, I come to a section of the country where this evil is greatest and most shameful and where it is practiced upon the purest American strain that still exists in this country—the children in the southern cotton mills, to whom I am now going to call the attention of the Senate. I am sorry that so few Senators upon the other side of the Chamber are interested in this question. I should like them to hear it. The evil is practiced in these States upon children who are the unadulterated, unmixed "American," the pure Scotch-Irish, whose fathers fought at Guilford Court House and Cowpens and followed Marion to victory.

Their blood has never been adulterated from that day to this. Every sociological investigator testifies that those southern children of this origin are capable of infinite development. But the children are not being developed. The mills are being "developed." I shall show you by the actual testimony of personal veloped." investigators that instead of being developed, these children are being ruined by the tens of thousands.

CHILD LABOR IN SOUTHERN COTTON MILLS.

First, Mr. President, I shall read from an article in World's World's Work is another one of the publications which can not be classed with those publications as to which I quoted an opponent of child-labor legislation as calling them, in vast contempt, "them there magazines." All these magazines are very high class, which do not accept anything that they do not have reason to believe is accurate.

I have not been able to procure the affidavit of Miss Ashby, who wrote this article, because she is now married to an English officer and at present lives in South Africa. But I will procure it before the debate terminates, if the letter can get to the interior of South Africa by that time. She went south as an investigator of the American Federation of Labor, and I shall present in concluding, when I sum up the testimony in this case, her article in the American Federationist, illustrated by pictures, so that Senators who doubt, so that Senators who think that words too lurid are being used, can with their own eyes take the testimony of the photographic lens as to what those children look like and what kind of a looking woman this sweet-souled investigator is. I shall exclude from this, as from all other articles, everything except merely the definite, detailed description of the fact.

Miss Ashby says:

Walking up the long, orderly building, deafened by the racket, yet fascinated by ingenious machinery, you become suddenly aware of a little gray shadow flitting restlessly up and down the aisles—a small girl, and with bare feet and pale face. She has a worn and anxious aspect, as if a weight of care and responsibility rested already on her baby shoulders. She either does not look at you at all or she turns her eyes but for a moment, unchildlike in their lack of interest, looking back immediately to the spinning frame.

A thread breaks first at one end of the long frame, then at the other. The tiny fingers repair the damage at the first place and she walks listlessly to the other. Something goes wrong above, and the child pushes forward a box to stand on that she may reach it. With a great shock it dawns on you that this child is working.

This is a scene with which I became too painfully familiar ever to forget or to misrepresent. During the latter half of December, 1900, and the first half of January, 1901, I visited twenty-four cotton mills in sixteen cities and villages of Alabama. I chose Alabama because the industry, although comparatively new there (only four out of the twenty-four mills I went through averaging more than five years' existence), is in an active stage of growth, and a child-labor bill had been pending before the legislature.

It was defeated after a severe fight, and the present law,

It was defeated after a severe fight, and the present law. which is practically no law at all, was put on the statute books. Miss Ashby continues:

I was prepared to find child labor, for wherever easily manipulated machinery takes the place of human muscles the child is inevitably drawn into the labor market, unless there are laws to protect it. But one could hardly be prepared to find in America to-day white children, 6 and 7 years of age, working for twelve hours a day—aroused before daybreak and toiling till long after sundown, in winter, with only half an hour for rest and refreshment.

That is what is going on in the South, as I shall show by scores of actual examples, giving the definite description of the children, how old they were, where they worked, and how they looked, all given under oath.

When the mills are tempted by pressure of work they make the same old mistakes of their industrial ancestry.

Their industrial ancestors I am going to refer to at some length. They were the English. This infamy began in England a hundred and some years ago, but England began to reform it a hundred years ago, although, even then, too late.

Some of them run the machinery at night, and the little children are called on to endure the strain of all-night work—
I would not read the following if I did not have another witness to this fact-and are sometimes kept awake by the vigilant superintendent with cold water dashed into their faces. I should hardly have believed it had I not seen those things myself.

One evening in December I stumbled through a totally unlighted mill village, falling by the way into ditches and deep ruts, and knocked at the door of one of the wooden huts where I saw a light. I asked the woman who opened it if I might come in. Assenting, she ushered me in. She was surrounded by a brood of very small boys, and her consumptive husband sat beside the fire. The smallest child, a poor little fellow that looked to be about 6 years old, nestled up to me as I talked to them. All worked in the mill except the mother, they told me.

"Not this one!" I exclaimed, looking down at the wee, thin boy beside me.

"Why, yes." He had worked for about a year; last year he worked forty nights; he was nearly 8 years old now. They left that mill because the night work was too hard on the children.

In answer to a query from me, the child said that he could scarcely sleep at all in the daytime.

At one place I heard of children working on the night shift, turned out for some fault at 2 o'clock in the morning, allowed by a compassionate clerk to go to sleep on a bench in the office, as they were afraid to go home.

Ladies told me, too, of a common sight in the mill cettages—children nome.

Ladies told me, too, of a common sight in the mill cottages—children lying face downward on the bed sleeping with exhaustion, just as they had come in from the night shift, too utterly weary even to remove their clothes.

ALL THESE ARE "AMERICAN" CHILDREN-NOT "FOREIGNERS."

That is not on the coal breakers of Pennsylvania or in the cotton mills of the North. These are not foreigners' children-Huns and Slavs and Bulgarians. These are American children working in the South to-day.

Continues Miss Ashby:

Often the whole family, except the baby actually in the cradle, is in the mill. Two or three of 8 years or older might be on the pay roll, but the youngest paid worker can get through her "side"—

"Side" is the term by which they measure the pay-

At 10 cents a day-

At 10 cents a day! A child 6 years of age, working twelve hours, standing on her feet, at 10 cents a day!

at 10 cents a day-with more ease if she has her little brother of 6 to help her.
I have seen help her.

I have seen a boy under 4 beginning his life of drudgery by pulling the yarn off bobbins to make bands.

A manager courteously conducting me through the mill would often explain—at some exclamation from me—"these very little ones are not working; they are only helping their brothers and sisters." I accepted the explanation until it dawned on me how numerous were these wee unpaid assistants.

Turning back once more to the purely human aspect of this uncivilized system I would say that no array of facts and figures are needed by those who have seen it in operation. I am familiar with the slums of two continents, but I can say I have never seen a more pitiful sight than the mill children, nor known little ones for whom the outlook was more hopeless.

It is not only that they are pale, shrunken, and howed—they lock.

more hopeless.

It is not only that they are pale, shrunken, and bowed—they look as if their brains were hypnotized and their souls paralyzed. A friend of mine in Atlanta, thinking to give some of these little victims a treat, asked a number out to her place in the country and turned them into the woods to play. What was her distress and amazement to find that they did not know what the word or the thing meant.

American children, not foreigners like in Pennsylvania and in New England, but American children in the Southern States.

American children, not foreigners like in Fellisyivania and in New England, but American children in the Southern States that do not know what "to play" means. I shall quote from this book some more when I come to an examination of the impossibility of the States handling this evil.

Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a cablegram.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from Indiana in what State the condition to which he refers as to age exists?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will describe it very definitely. is a map [indicating] where you see the Southern Railroad with little black dots on the map. The little black dots represent cotton factories which have grown up along the line of that road, and they honeycomb the States of Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina, and North Carolina. They also exist elsewhere—everywhere, more or less. The things that I have now been reading from were from Alabama, and what I shall immediately read from are Georgia; and on a little later I shall present some affidavits from North Carolina and South Carolina. I have spent one day on Pennsylvania and some of the other places in the North where, without using a word that is too strong, the crushing of these children is given, notwithstanding it is excused upon the ground that they are the children of foreigners. In the Southern States they are not the children of foreigners, and when I get to that part of my argument I am going to call the serious attention of Southern Senators to a future for the South which this very evil is now creating.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Cablegram.]

PARIS, January 21, 1907.

Senator Beveringe, Washington: Ready swear accuracy child-labor articles Post.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall now read illustrations of what exists in the South, written in a remarkable series of articles in the Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia, from Mrs. Van Vorst's personal investigations. I tried to get her affidavit, as I got the affidavit of the rest of the witnesses from whom I read, but she is now in Paris. So she was cabled as to whether she would make the affidavit, and she has sent back the cablegram you have just heard, that she is willing to make affidavit to the truth of every one of the statements that are here made. She says:

A SOUTHERN "MILL TOWN."

Anyone who has visited a mill town knows the deserted aspect of its streets during the daytime. Had it not been for the roar of the engines which throbbed on as the pulse continues to beat, in unconsciousness, I might have supposed Alabama City to be a village whence all life had suddenly fied.

I page over a decomption by

I pass over a description here and get down to her questioning of the children and her description of the children. She went to one of the mills and first encountered a little girl, a little girl that had worked twelve hours a day and was too tired to stand. Mrs. Van Vorst says:

She sank down beside me, leaning back against the post of the door-steps. Her face was hardly less white than the knitted woolen "cloud" which covered her head.
"I am tired enough to sit down," she sighed.
"Do you get tired in the mill?" I asked.

"I reckon I do. We live up on the hill yonder, and when I first started to work it didn't seem nights like I ever could get home. Now I don't mind it."

"How long have you been at work?"

"Over a year."
"And how old are you?"
"Eleven."
"What are the hours in the mill?"
"About twelve a day, I reckon."

Listen to this description. She tells how she arrived at her estimate of twelve hours a day:

"Well, there's the first bell at half-past 4-"

That is in the morning, Mr. President-half-past 4 in the morning-

"that's for ringin' us up; then there's the second bell for breakfast; and they don't give us more than a few minutes to eat before they begin callin' us at 20 minutes to 6."

A girl of 11 years, and I will show instances of girls of 5, 6, and 7 that are gotten out of bed at half-past 4 in the morning and are standing on their feet at 6, working for twelve hours a day, until the sun goes down.

"And you get out at—"
"Twenty minutes a-past 6."

A girl awakened at half-past 4 a. m.; in the mill at 6; working all day until half-past 6 p. m. That is the kind of a person out of which we are going to make the "capitalists" of the future, according to the editorial that I read when I began my remarks.

With only half an hour for lunch? She leaned listlessly against the wooden post.

Here is another example. I choose to give these specific illustrations so that we will not be indulging in any suppositious cases. Here is another girl:

She was the victim, and there are many, not only of greed, but of the ignorance of parents. Her father and brothers made enough to support the family and to put money aside, for the house in which they lived they had built themselves, and they owned it and the ground on which it stood.

Then Mrs. Van Vorst, to be absolutely truthful, gives a statement about the generosity of the mill owners themselves.

The founders of the mills at Alabama City have made the village as attractive as possible (given the monotony which any place must present where everybody has about the same income, and that income very small). The little one-story houses occupied by the mill families are built with sloping, irregular roofs, verandas which are more or less screened by vines the company has planted. About each home there is a small bit of ground inclosed with a fence, all of which, together with the fact that no two of the cottages are just alike, gives a pleasing aspect to the town. No law obliges such corporations to provide a schoolhouse and teacher or a library, and one's first impulse is to feel that here, really, is a mill run almost on philanthropic principles. Alabama City is undoubtedly the most attractive mill town in the South, but the difficulty of procuring operatives and of keeping them is so great that it is a good investment to make the surroundings as alluring as possible, and it is cheaper to offer swimming pools and amusement halls and lodge rooms than it is to raise the wages of 2,000 laborers.

amusement halls and longe rooms than it is to race the second sec

Then she joined the operatives. Then she says:

Three things struck me most forcibly: The ghastly appearance of all the hands; the extreme animation and cheerfulness of the little children; the appalling languor of the girls and boys who were fifteen and over.

Here, as well as when I begin to examine the reasons for the deterioration of the British people, I might as well point out that when the children begin work, say, at 7 or 8, they are extremely animated. The vitality which ought to go for growth, which ought to go for development, goes into the work they are doing, and it is with neurotic activity that they toil. But so exhausted do they become by that kind of labor in that kind of an atmosphere that one of the consequences is that by the time they have reached 15 and 16 they are practically nervous wrecks.

The girl who volunteered to "show me around" was typical; she had the natural awkwardness of those whose muscles have deteriorated because of poor nourishment. She hitched along, wielding her arms and hands, like so much dead weight, as best she could. Her face was pale to transparency. How old was she? "Most 16." And how long had she been at work? "About eight years."

Down in the "weave room" my guide was a girl of 14, whose apprenticeship at "spinnin" had lasted five years.

The first girl began work at 8 years of age and the last girl at 9 years of age. There's just piles of little ones in here-too little, I think.

That is what the girls were saying to Mrs. Van Vorst.

When the owner used to come through we used to "run out," those tinlest ones...

"Run out?" I asked.

"Yes; hide 'em in the closets or anywhere for fear he'd stop 'em workin'."

There are humane men among these mill owners.

A FUTURE " CAPITALIST."

Here is a description of one of the future "capitalists," which the New York Sun seems to think will develop from these chil-This is the best description of the best child that Mrs. Von Vorst specifically describes:

His legs and arms protruded, bare and lank, from clothes long since outgrown, and his whole attitude expressed such physical exhaustion that instinctively I exclaimed to the woman who waited at the door-

"Is that your boy?"

Perhaps she detected something more than curiosity in my tone, for she answered:

"Yes, mam. He's been sleepin'. He's on fer night work neow."

"Yes, mam. To yours of age, and had begun to work at 7. This boy was 15 years of age, and had begun to work at 7. He could not read or write and insisted that next year he was going to school. He was helping to support his mother. He was a fine type of boy.

was a fine type of boy.

He had never had a book in his hands or "scratched a line," as his mother put it; he had had no contact with that outside world of imagination and learning in which the rest of us dwell. He had been for years up before dawn and plied in the service of a machine for twelve hours a day; he had spent his childhood as a laborer, a bread winner, who earned food and shelter not only for himself, but for another; he had lived without pleasure, without amusements, without hope—without hope, yes; but never without courage.

And when at last an opportunity presented itself, what form did it take? The chance to extenuate his remaining energies working night and day; to be drenched to the skin; to be too tired to eat when food was put before him, too exhausted to sleep when his head touched the pillow. This was his chance, and he met it fighting the good fight and bound to be victor. His lank and withered body gave evidence sufficient of what he was going through.

he was going through.

In Georgia, I think it was—the Senators from that State can tell me if it was not—there was a "gentleman's agreement" among mill owners in lieu of the law such as they have now. I will have something to say about that law later on.

Mr. BACON. What is the Senator's remark?
Mr. BEVERIDGE. A "gentleman's agreement" among manufacturers it was called.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator mean to inquire whether or not there is a law in the State on that subject?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I do not inquire. I know.
Mr. BACON. I do not understand the Senator's remark.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. What I am explaining, or was just about to explain, is that there was in Georgia among the cotton manufacturers a "gentleman's agreement" about the working of chil-

Mr. BACON. There was.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That took the place of the law. You have a law down there at present which, for the purpose of stopping child labor, is not worth the paper it is printed on, as the Senator himself ought to know, and if he does not I shall convince him of it by testimony which can be established in

Mr. BACON. Of course, that is a very pointed remark, and if the Senator will permit me to say a word-Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I have no design to interrupt the Senator in his presentation

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all right.

Mr. BACON. But as he has, in the first place, appealed to me, and then, in the second place, proceeds to express his opinion with such definite precision and absolute conclusiveness and to lay upon me the responsibility of a possible want of sincerity-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No, no; I did not say that.

Mr. BACON. I simply wish to say to the Senator, for I disagree with him with very great hesitation and much diffidence and great regret in view of the predetermined judgment he has pronounced upon the matter

THE GEORGIA LAW.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to say that I disclaim any intention of reflecting on the Senator's sincerity, and I do not know how in the world he ever could infer it from what I said. I simply said that I am familiar with the Georgia law; I am familiar with the so-called "gentlemen's agreement" that preceded it; I am familiar with the fact that the law does not amount to anything in Georgia, and I was quite sure that the Senator-acute, able, public man as he is, and I say that with all possible earnestness—knew those things. In fact, I do not think the Senator will stand up and deliver any eulogy on the law of Georgia, or if he does, he certainly will not deliver any eulogy upon what happens under it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I would not undertake to follow the Senator in his criticism at this time especially, but in order that I may not be misunderstood I will simply say to the Senator that the need for a law had been generally recognized in my State. One has been passed that is working well at the present time, and it is worth a little more than the paper it is written upon, and the question which is, I think, in the minds of Senators here is not as to whether there has been and is a great evil in regard to this matter, but really whether this is a matter for the attention of the States or a matter to be dealt with, as the Senator proposes, by Federal legislation.

I do not disagree with the Senator in any manner or in any degree as to the importance of legislation of this kind and as to the importance of the correction of the evil which he is so eloquently setting forth and portraying. I am waiting with much patience when the Senator shall reach what I regard as the crucial question here, which is one of law, and when we have the argument in no ambiguous terms of the Senator there will be, he has promised us, no doubt left in the minds of any Senator as to the correctness of his position.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will do that, Mr. President; and I would not take so much time, as I stated in the beginning of my remarks, with the statement of facts and the presentation of evidence in the case if I did not mean that it shall be understood that no man can say that this evil is exaggerated; that we indulge in vague charges without coming down to specifications of the actual evil and the infamous inhumanity of it. and the danger of it to our institutions. That is why I am taking so much time, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, with the facts.

So far as his State is concerned, I say to the Senator, and I think that he will agree with me, if it was in my State I should attack it with tenfold more vigor than I do the evil in another

I do not think that in its broader aspects this is a State question at all. I do not intend now to get into the legal part of this argument; but I will say this—that I have so drawn this bill as to eliminate the question of "State rights," because I myself profoundly respect those who sincerely hold to that political doctrine. I have so drawn the bill that every "States rights" man can vote for it without violating his constitutional convictions. If I had not meant to do that, I should have drawn the I'll on precisely the lines of the meat bill; but I did not want to meet the question of "States rights," because I knew there are men here who sincerely believe in that political philosophy, and have been in the past, who would be again, willing to risk their lives in its support.

I do not intend to get into any debate upon that, but I think that the broader aspect of this evil is purely national. It is not only State citizens that you are ruining, it is the citizens of the Republic as well. It is not only Georgia children that are being murdered, it is American children as well. It is not confined to Pennsylvania alone. It exists all over the Republic. I shall show by an affidavit that in the Northern States, in which the best factory inspection in the United States exists, Illinois, the law is violated. It is something which in its broader aspect the States, as I shall show when I come to argue that part of it, can not reach.

But what I am doing now is presenting facts. I know it is monotonous, I know it is wearisome; but it is like trying a case in court. The evidence must be presented. I am very much obliged to the Senator for his patience.

Mrs. Van Vorst continues:

The "gentlemen's agreement" made in Georgia among employers affects only the cotton industry. In all other manufactures no laws, written or unwritten, exist to protect the laborer.

This is July 7, 1906:

WORK IN A BAG MILL.

At a bag company works in Atlanta there are in the spinning room the usual 100 "kids" out of a total of 160 hands. The sweepers and doffers whom I questioned gave their ages as 7, 9, and one little waif responded apologetically: "I am 5—I am only he pin."

The overseer himself volunteered this conclusive testimony: "There's children in here, lots of 'em that I'm morally satisfied are under 12 years old; but when the parents swear, what can you do about it?"

Of course under this bill if he found himself before a United States court, with a penitentiary staring him in his face, he would know "what to do about it." He would err on the right side. That is what he "would do about it," and not accept the false and perjured certificate of unworthy parents, when he morally knew that the child whose life he was crushing out was under-age. I have no respect for the man whose conscience can be relieved by a perjured certificate as to the age of a child. Hear Mrs. Van Vorst further:

Bad as are the conditions in this company's spinning rooms, it is nevertheless not here, but in the bag mill, where there is nothing to restrain employers, where the worst conditions prevail.

The foreman, a kindly man, remarked as he accompanied me to this section of the factory:

"The dust here keeps me with a cold in my head about the whole time."

Fine, pernicious, it rose, this dust, in snowy clouds, filling the air. As I looked into the workshop it seemed as though a veil had been drawn before my eyes.

There were 130 hands in the room—70 of them were little children, the rest were women. Here and there were perceptible in the ghastly artificial light the wooden frames upon which the bags must be stretched and turned. They lifted their prongs high above the heads of the tailest child laborer. Yet with an upward gesture that carried him almost off his feet he must fling one bag after another over this instrument, turn them, and slip them free again with frantic speed.

The women, meanwhile provided with electric sewing machines, whose insistent "burring" produced a peculiar bediam, were "running up" the seams on these same long and narrow bags which we are accustomed to see used for flour, meal, and the various grocers' provisions. The materials they are made of is stiffened with a dressing of white clay, which, at the first touch, is scattered from the coarse meshes of the loose-woven cotton cloth, and begins to fly about in the air, forming a cloud, settling over everything, filling gradually the lungs that inhale it at every breath.

We are often told how necessary fresh air is for those who exercise, and who, consequently, with an accelerated circulation, need more rapidly to purify their own blood. What it is difficult to imagine, must be the physical condition of the children at these mills! In such an atmosphere as we have above described, one boy turns in a day from 3,000 to 6,000 bags.

Everything, as well as the law, seems to further this voluntary destruction of lives. The public schools in the neighborhood of the mill close at 2 o'clock, so that the youngest children can go into the factory for a half day's work. And the company offers an extra 25 cents in a week's wages for the boys who, ambitious beyond their force, succeed in daily repeating thousands of times the gesture which twists their bodies out of shape.

There is, in the neighborhood of the mill, a Methodist social settlement directed by four residents who are doing admirable work among the mill hands.

I want to stop right here and say t

I want to stop right here and say to any Senator who doubts' this sworn evidence, that I have very large photographs showing the children in these establishments, and you can see what kind of children are working twelve hours a day in such conditions as these. The camera tells no lies.

Here is one illustration:

Out of forty boys who attend one of their gymnasium classes, there are just two boys who have reached the age of 12.

Here is another case:

In this mill there were children at work spinning, rolling yarn onto shuttles, preparing it for the dye room; but as I was accompanied by a clerk from the office I had no chance to question these toilers.

Then she went to another mill.

Then she went to another mill.

It was approaching the noon hour, and as I left the mills, walking along in the direction of the village, which lay across the canal, I came upon a small boy whose clothes, flecked with cotton, betrayed him as one of the child-labor brigade.

"Do you work at the mill?" I asked him.

"I quit." he affirmed.

"Why?" I queried again.

"They made me work till 12 o'clock."

"Till 12 at night?"

"Yes, mam; an' I had to come home alone, so I thought I might as well quit."

A little farther along there was a group of boys varying in age between 3 and 10 years—tween 3 and 10 years-

This is in Georgia-

The oldest a mere wraith. His face was pale to ghastliness, and his hair had grown long and sparse with a vitality that contradicted the lifelessness of his flesh and skin.

I put the usual question, and he answered:

"I did work to the mill. But I took chills, an' so I quit."

There is no question about those children's age. Here is another description of child labor in a mill.

Mr. BACON. At what point in Georgia was that?
Mr. BEVERIDGE. At the cotton works in Atlanta, I think.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. At the cotton works in Atlanta, I think.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I think all these mills are at Atlanta, though this whole series of articles deals with the condition in various States, and it is generally known where they are located. I suppose the affidavits must be now on the way.

Toll-worn and haggard, silent, dogged, they resembled in no way he little folks who are yet on the side of life which is all expectancy and hope.

She could get the names of the "truants" in the schools, and having thus obtained the names of the "truants," she would visit the homes where the children were "truants," because they were in the mills until they got home.

The oldest of the trio who returned to this miserable home of which he was the mainstay was 14; he had been nine years at work, and during that existence among the whirling bobbins of the spinning room, something of the machine's monotony had reflected itself irreparably in his jaded eyes."

Of course he will be one of future captains of industry of whom the Sun editorial prophesies.

He was dressed with a self-respecting neatness; his hair was brushed back against his gray, wrinkled forehead—it seemed, indeed, observing his ghastly pallor, as though he were, by his own hands, made ready for the grave, waiting only the final blow which would carry him hence.

The other two hands were a girl of 8, who kept still some of the buoyancy of childhood, and a boy of 11, who looked like so much formless clay which had been carried as débris from the potter's wheel. Silently this little trio filed into the kitchen; there was not half an hour to spend at home, to dine, and to return again to the greedy mill.

You might think, you who have watched your own rosy cheeked children devour with normal appetities the hot and savory food set before them at noon, that these little laborers, who already had accomplished a six hours of work, would have fallen ravenously upon their dinner. Without speaking these three children took their places at the table, and, as though with an effort, they swallowed this meal.

They did not touch the bacon—their throats, dry and parched from the overheated atmosphere of the spinning room, refused the nourishing food and craved some stimulant, like the clear black coffee, of which they greedily partook.

She describes that too much in detail for me to take time to read it. After the description, she goes on:

"There's everyday school," she went on, "and there's night school three times a week, where I try to send the children, but it seems like they wuz too tired when night comes."

How much did they make—these three breadwinners?

Fifty to sixty cents a day.

When the children had slowly and with difficulty swallowed the tasteless dinner, they set out again, silent and dogged, for the mills. And no exception were they. From the rows of frame houses along the canal there came other children making their way, silent, dogged, toward the great brick fabric which produced manufactures to the value of $10,000,000 yearly.

Mr. BACON. The last instance the Senator read was in Atlanta, was it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suppose those are the mills. I suppose she means those mills.

Mr. BACON. But I am speaking about the particular instance which the Senator is now reading.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I take it, it is Atlanta.

Mr. BACON. I think not, from the fact that there is no canal there. That is the reason I asked the Senator the question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. At any rate, it is some mill town; but that is not important.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon the interruption at this point

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall be glad to have the Senator's interruption.

Mr. BACON. I desire to say that while I have no doubt that there have been great evils in this regard in Georgia, while I have no doubt that there have been instances such as the Senator has read, and while I have no doubt, in a general way, that there has been a great deal of evil from child labor in the factories in Georgia, as there has been everywhere where there has been factory work, if not in Indiana—and I presume it is true to a greater or less degree there, although the Senator's remarks as to what condition exists in Indiana would indicate that, in his opinion, such a condition does not exist there—I want to simply say that, while there may be these instances, as doubt-less there have been, and while I would not minimize the fact that the general matter of child labor in the State has been one which has constituted an evil, still it is a very great injustice to present these isolated instances as representative of general conditions. For myself I have been in a position where I have seen a great deal of the factory population, although I never owned a dollar's worth of stock in a factory in my life. I know that the instances which have been recounted here are not representative of the general conditions.

I simply want to make that general statement in justice to an industry in my State, which is a very large one, and very largely under the control and management of men whom I know personally to be men of high character. While these evils have existed to an extent possibly which should not have been permitted under their supervision and management, possibly in isolated instances such as have escaped their immediate attention, in the large manufacturing centers of Atlanta and Augusta and Macon and Columbus, where these cotton manufactories are, and other towns, dozens of which I could mention, the factory population generally are in a comfortable situation. They live in well-built and well-ventilated houses, not crowded, and the conditions are not such as have been portrayed by these magazine writers, whose articles I have sometimes read, about the factories in my own immediate neighborhood, where I have known the facts. They have taken isolated cases and have endeavored to make it appear that they represent general conditions.

If I do not trespass upon the Senator too long, I wish to add, as he has brought up the State of Georgia pointedly

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not more pointedly, I will say to the Senator, than I have brought up Pennsylvania or Maine, or than I intend to bring up North Carolina and South Carolina; not more pointedly than I did Alabama, and not more pointedly than I will New Jersey or any other State where such conditions exist.

I quite understand that the Senator desired to make no particular allusion to my State.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; but just to re

No; but just to refer to the States where the conditions exist.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me a moment-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. What I wanted to say is that the Senator has pointedly alluded to the Georgia law, which was intended to correct these evils, and he has spoken of that law as not being worth the paper on which it is written. I wish to ask the Senator, in this connection, in order that it may go out to the country with the learned speech of the distinguished Senator from Indiana, to permit me to insert in the RECORD in his remarks the law of the State of Georgia in regard to child labor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I do not want it published in the RECORD in the midst of my speech, for I am myself going to give an abstract of your law.

An abstract is not the law.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And I am going to show by prominent newspapers of the Senator's town, and I will put in the sworn statements before I get through, as to the applications under this I will talk about the law a little later, when we new law. come to discuss its utter inefficiency under existing conditions.

As to these being "isolated" instances which do not do justice, etc., if that is the point the Senator wants to make, I am glad he wants to make it and to have him make any other point he wants to make.

Mr. BACON. The Senator's speech will doubtless have a wider circulation than that of any other Senator would have, and as he is more familiar with this subject, having made a study of this question and having denounced this law, of which he proposes to give only an abstract—it is not a very long enactment—I should like very much, in justice to the lawmaking power of my State, to have the law published, in order that the public may judge, not according to the Senator's opinion, but according to their own opinion, when they read the law, whether or not it is an effective and just law.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator can put the law in his own I shall put an abstract of the law in my speech. speech.

Mr. BACON. But this will not go in the RECORD as my speech at all, but will go in as the Senator's speech.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Ten RECORDS could not contain all the child-labor laws of the various States.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator declines to yield, I shall not attempt to interrupt him any further.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator must excuse me.

THESE NOT ISOLATED CASES.

The Senator says-and I want his attention-that these are "isolated" cases. On the contrary, they are typical cases. The Senator will have an opportunity to disprove them if they are not true. Everyone who has made these statements has made, or will make, an affidavit as to their truth.

When the Senator says that these are exceptional cases, what does he say about the estimate that there are to-day some 60,000 children 14 years of age or under that work in the cotton mills of the South? That is the fact, and the census figures themselves six years ago, when the industry was only in its infancy, showed there were some 30,000 children under 16 years working in the factories in the South. Does the Senator think that 30,000, does he think that 60,000 child slaves are "isolated" or "occasional?" It looks to me as though they are usual.

Before I get through I will take up other States. I will do so because the Senator seems to think we are not dealing with a great national evil, with a great sociological and humanitarian question.

Senators seem to think that they are the attorneys of the States here, and that when something is mentioned in which their States are named they must get up and denounce and deny it.

I am sorry I have to mention the fact that this occurs in the State of Pennsylvania or New Jersey or Maine or Georgia or any other State. It is the evil I am after, and it is the evil that the American people are going to stop.

When the Senator says these instances are "isolated" and "exceptional" and do injustice to these "best people," I will read to the Senator a little bit later on, when I come to an examination of the system of law in one of the Southern States. what some of the manufacturers said before the House Committee about their being the "best people" in another State, and I will bring affidavits from that very State to show that those children are being practically murdered there.

I want to show the fact that just a year or two ago, under one of the best laws in the United States—and when I come to discuss the laws of the States dealing with this evil I shall present affidavits showing that the mill owners of Georgia, of Alabama, and of some of the rest of the Southern States were taking train loads of shipments of children from Tennessee, where the law was properly executed and where they were prevented from perpetrating further outrages upon them.

The Senator is mistaken. He has not studied this question as I have. He has not informed himself upon it as I have and as hundreds of other very devoted people have. And let me say to the Senator people almost as eminent as the Senator him-self, and as earnestly for "State rights" as the Senator, who have come, after years of effort for this reform, to the profound conviction that they must appeal to the Nation.

I give as an example of that kind of man Dr. Felix Adler, of York, and perhaps there is not a more eminent or learned publicist and scholar living that Dr. Felix Adler. Unquestionably he is the most accomplished and learned "States-rights" man in this country. He believes in it as a principle of government, and yet, after having spent years in the study of this question, seeing it was national in character, he believes the evil can only be reached by a law that is national in its application. repeat, the Senator is mistaken if he thinks it is "occasional" and "isolated." Are 60,000 "occasional" and "isolated?"

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana "occasional" yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.
Mr. CARMACK. I want to ask the Senator a question for information. He said there are 60,000 children in the cotton mills of the South. I want to know what proportion that bears to the total number of employees?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There have been various statements made as to the fact, and I shall produce, before I get through the evidence in this case, a clipping from a paper in North Carolina, which gives the statement, I think, of the president of the Cotton Association, to the effect that 75 per cent of the operatives were children.

Mr. CARMACK. Under 14 years of age?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield.

Mr. BACON. I will not interrupt the Senator any further.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all right; go on.

Mr. BACON. The Senator in reply to the suggestion as to the efficacy of the Georgia law made a statement as to the number of children under age in the South who are now employed in the mills. I should like to ask the Senator, as he seems to have exhaustively studied the question, if he is prepared to state how many children in Georgia under 12 years of age or under 14 years of age are to-day employed in the mills?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will answer the Senator even more directly than that. I will state that under the new law, which went into effect this very year, there had been applications for the employment of children up to last week in the county clerk's office—I believe it is in Atlanta, or whichever is the greatest city in your State—for 3,000 children, just as there were in Maryland applications since the new law went into effect there for 11,000 children, 1,200 of which were affected, although the census shows there were only 5,000 children of that age at work after the law went into effect on the first of the year; and I shall present it. There have been applications for more than 3,000.

Mr. BACON. How many of the applications have been granted?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All were granted.

Mr. BACON. Has the Senator any evidence that they were all granted?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, sir. There is no factory inspection in your State. I will further say to the Senator that any of the cotton manufacturers down there with whom the Senator is on friendly terms will tell him that the law is not worth, so far as standing in the way of the employment of children is concerned, the paper on which it is written. I have had the statement made to me that it was just precisely the kind of law they wanted. If the Senator wants to defend some por-tion of his case—I believe he is on the subcommittee which is to pass upon the question as to whether or not we can do anything with this bill—I advise him not to take that phase of it.

I will come to the exact statement about those 3,000. I do not want to disarrange my papers or I would try to fish it up now.

At present I will continue the testimony:

ANOTHER MILL.

Passing apparently unnoticed through the spinning rooms I questioned the children at will. Thirty of those to whom I spoke gave their ages as under 12.

That is "occasional" and "isolated"—thirty in one mill.

There were none younger than 9, but many of those 11 and 12 had been five years at work. They worked with a mechanical activity, with nervous energy and determination, and though I saw not one face that had in it a ray of hope, yet I heard never a murmur of complaint nor an exclamation of impatience or revolt.

Over and over again, as I talked with the children, I tried to join the broken threads of the spools onto the whirling bobbins. Missing the "roller" nine times out of ten, and letting thus the "sliver" accumulate in soft, vaporous clouds, I caused some amusement among my youthful instructors.

As far as light and air and new machinery were concerned, the conditions in the mill seemed to be irreproachable. However, though light and air may, in a nursery, prove adequate requisites, in a factory which works its employees mercliessly they contribute only to prolonging for a brief space "the slow death" of the child hands.

Here is another

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I hate to interrupt the Senator, but then the Senator's statements, as I say, go out to the world, and the condition that he speaks of as being one that renders absolutely worthless the Georgia law, under which a large number of applications have been made, I want to just read one single sentence from the Georgia law

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Go ahead; read it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Go anead; read it.

Mr. BACON. Showing that the condition to which he refers must terminate on the 1st day of January, 1908.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; it is since the 1st day of January that applications have been made.

Mr. BACON. Exactly. Section 3 of the Georgia statute is as follows:

Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That on and after January 1, 1908, no child under 14 years of age shall be employed or allowed to labor in or about any factory or manufacturing establishment within this State between the hours of 7 p. m. and 6 a. m.

So that so far as night work is concerned, it is absolutely excluded and prohibited.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What the Senator reads is a good deal as though we should pass this kind of a law: "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, That men shall be good."

You have no factory inspection; you have no way of enforcing your law; you have no way of properly determining the ages of children, and your law is not enforced.

Mr. BACON. It is made a penal offense to violate its provisions. It can be enforced that way.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly, it is made a penal offense; but who is to inform and who is to find out? Has there been any prosecution thus far? No; there has been no prosecution thus far, and it is getting along in the year, too.

"DON'T KNOW HOW TO PLAY."

Here is another:

There is another.

There was in this busy mill an unusual freedom, a surprising indifference to the intrusion of an outsider upon its precincts. I took advantage of it, and lingered to talk with a girl who had followed me out of the spinning room onto the stairs. Her eyes reflected the misery and insufficiency to which she had too soon been accustomed.

"Have you been long at work?" I asked her.

"Yes, four years. I'm 15 now. I come in when I wuz eleavun."

I am going to pass rapidly through this because I want to get to the legal part of the argument, but I must read this to the Senator. Let us see where it is from? In one of the Southern mill towns-

Up in a back yard in Avenue B I found a group of children who belonged in the factory rightly, but who were not at work for the same reasons that big hands are "not at work;" some were ill, some were discontented. They made a pitiful group. Ghastly was their pallor in the broad daylight, and pathetic their childish efforts to amuse themselves. This bruised and limping detachment of the child-labor bettallors. "What are you playing?" I asked.

A tall boy of 10 or 12, with an uncertain hip which seemed to give under him at every step, answered sheepishly:

"We don't know how to play."

There, Mr. President, are two evidences that investigators found children that did not know how to play and did not know what they were playing.

"Why aren't you at work?" This was a more suggestive question. "I got struck in the cardin' room." He touched his hip. "I am only taking a day off."

That boy was 11 years of age. Here was another case:

The first joint of his thumb was gone-

And I want to say to the Senator from Georgia and to all Senators and to the whole country that I can produce evidence, if necessary, that it is not uncommon among the mill children of the South for them to be without one and two fingers, and sometimes two fingers and a thumb, and that, too, before they are 10 years old.

"How did you lose that?" I queried-

Meaning his thumb-

"Cardin'," he answered in his mild, aged manner. "I have been over a year't the mill."
"How old are you?"
"Ten."

So he lost his thumb at 9.

"Are there any boys as young as you are in the mill?"

"Heaps of 'em younger," he affirmed; and then, lest I get an exaggerate; impression, he corrected:

"There's none younger'n 8 years old."

"Do you like to work?" I went on.

There was a lassitude about his whole tiny person, yet his response was nevertheless resolute.

"I like work better'n doin nothin'."

"Wouldn't you like to go to school?"

"I never have been to school," he said, "but I'd love that better'n anything."

I should like the attention of the Senator from Georgia to

I should like the attention of the Senator from Georgia to This is from the article of Mrs. Van Vorst Determined, as was my declared intention from the beginning, to relate only what I myself saw and heard, I have in writing these accounts kept to the truth in every detail. Yet I doubt whether these simple descriptions have conveyed vividly enough the impression of misery, of hopelessness, of weariness, and depletion given by the children who toil, to one who considers them from the human point of view, and not merely as the inconveniences of a "necessary evil."

WHAT MILL SUPERINTENDENT SAID.

So far the intervention of the "police" throughout Georgia and Alabama has been but nominal. In such mill villages as Pell City, Lindale, Alabama City, and West Huntsville, where the "corporation" owns the land, the buildings on it, the schools, the church, there the corporation practically makes the only laws applied, and applies them according to its fancy. The nature of this corporation is in no wise different from that of the feudal baron, and were it not for the love of freedom, which, because they are Americans, actuates even the most foriorn specimens of the cotton mill and causes them, in frequent outbursts of revolt, to be ever on the move, changing one slave master for another—were it not for this spirit of independence shown on the part of the laborers, the abuses perpetrated in the "corporation" villages would resemble nothing so much as the oppression of the people by the grand seigneurs of the Middle Ages; that same oppression which, weighing too long time and too heavily, brought about at last a vengeance so bloodthirsty and so appalling that the slothful patrons, quaking in prison, dubbed it the "Reign of Terror," and history gave it the more dignified appellation of "the great revolution."

Nothing could be clearer than the statement regarding child labor made to me by one of the mill agents in Alabama:

"If the parents swear falsely about the ages of their children, what are we to do? We are here, first of all, to make money."

And a more humane superintendent, who had been for years in the mills near Huntsville, put the case in this way:

"No one would want to have children, but you can't get the big help, and if you won't take the children the parents won't stay; and when they swear, what are you going to do? There should be compulsory school education. The law now is a dead letter."

That, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, is a statement of a mill owner himself, and the same statement has personally been made to me by a mill owner of Georgia concerning the recent law that was passed there.

THE EVIL NATIONAL.

Mrs. Van Vorst continues:

The question of child labor is not confined to any one section of the country; it is national; and in the South it is native, one may say, owing to the absence as yet of all foreign element in the laboring population.

It is native—that is, it is American—children that are being ruined in the South. Let the Senator from Georgia think of that.

Now I send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read an affidavit.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Personally appeared before me this 22d day of January, 1907, Elbert Hubbard, to me known, and made affidavit as follows: I reside at East Aurora, N. Y., and am president and manager of the Roycrofters Corporation, said corporation employing about 500 workers. I have been a day laborer, a factory foreman, and for ten years was superintendent of the Larkin Soap Company, of Buffalo, N. Y. I am familiar with labor conditions in many States and countries. My article on child labor, which was printed in The Philistine Magazine for May, 1902, was written after personally visiting various cotton mills in six different States, and the facts therein stated are substantially true and correct, and still exist.

Sworn to before me this 22d day of January, 1907.

[SEAL.]

Notary Public for and in Eric County, N. Y.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is dated last week. He says he has become familiar with labor conditions, and he wrote from personal investigation the article which I am going to read. Note that Mr. Hubbard says that what I shall now read is true to-day. Mr. KEAN.

Mr. KEAN. It was written in 1902. Mr. BEVERIDGE. In 1902, but there has been no change in the law down in South Carolina about which this article was Hubbard says it is all true now. I have not perwritten. sonally investigated, but men and women who have make oath to those statements. If the Senator thinks this evil is not greater than it was when this article was written I shall prove by a large number of affidavits, which I am going to have read in a moment, that it is worse,

I want to read here-and while I am taking a great deal of time to present the evidence in this case, I can tell Senators that it is only the beginning of the evidence that is at my disposal, and that, if this debate proceeds much longer and if it is required, much more evidence and many more statements, all susceptible of proof in court, will be produced whenever it is

CHILD LABOR IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Says Mr. Hubbard, under oath, mind you:

The infant factory slaves of South Carolina can never develop into men and women. There are no mortality statistics; the mill owners bafile all attempts of the outside public to get at the facts, but my opinion is that in many mills death sets the little prisoner free inside of four years.

Beyond that he can not hope to live, and this opinion is derived from careful observation and interviews with several skilled and experienced physicians who practice in the vicinity of the mills.

Boys and girls from the age of 6 years and upwards are employed. They usually work from 6 o'clock in the morning until 7 at night. For four months of the year they go to work before daylight and they work until after dark.

four months of the year they go to work before daylight and they work until after dark.

At noon I saw them squat on the floor and devour their food, which consisted mostly of corn bread and bacon. These weazened pigmies munched in silence and then toppied over in sleep on the floor in all the abandon of babyhood. Very few wore shoes and stockings; dozens of little girls of, say, 7 years of age wore only one garment, a lineywoolsey dress. When it came time to go to work the foreman marched through the groups, shaking the sleepers, shouting in their ears, lifting them to their feet, and in a few instances kicking the delinquents into wakefulness.

The long afternoon had begun—from a quarter to 1 until 7 o'clock they worked without respite or rest.

These toddlers I saw, for the most part, did but one thing—they watched the flying spindles on a frame 20 feet long and tied the broken

That reminds me of what I read to the Senate—but not many Senators heard it, for somehow they do not seem to care to listen to this evidence—concerning the silk girl of the Pennsylvania mill, who watched the thread and its play until at night she could not sleep for seeing the threads that seemed to burn into

Of course it is not so interesting, I suppose, to learn about the murder of these children as it is to hear an academic discussion about artificial "rights" of artificial things, or a "constitutional" discussion on the law. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I will come to that in due season, but not until the facts have been laid before the country. So, again to the evidence. Mr. Hubbard goes on:

They could not sit at their tasks. Back and forward they paced, watching with inanimate, dull look the flying spindles. The roar of the machinery drowned every other sound—back and forth paced the baby toilers in their bare feet and mended the broken threads. Two, three, or four threads would break before they could control the 20 feet—the threads were always breaking.

The noise and the constant looking at the flying wheels reduce nervous sensation in a few months to the minimum. The child does not think; he ceases to suffer.

He does his work like an automaton; he is a part of the roaring machinery; memory is seared; physical vitality is at such low ebb that he ceases to suffer. Nature puts a short limit on torture by sending insensibility. If you suffer * * it is a sure sign you are alive.

At a certain night school where several good women were putting forth efforts to mitigate the condition of these baby slaves, one of the teachers told me that they did not try to teach the children to read; they simply put forth an effort to arouse the spirit through pictures and telling stories. In this school I saw the sad spectacle of half the class—of a dozen or more—sunk into sleep that more resembled a stupor. The teacher was a fine, competent woman, but worn-out nature was too much for her. To teach you must make your appeal to life.

The reason that thought flags and stupor takes possession of the child who works at one task for eleven hours a day is through the fact that he does not express himself. We grow through expression, and expression, which is exercise, is necessary to life. The child in the mill never talks to anyone—even if the rules did not forbid it, the roar of the machinery would make it impossible. All orders are carried out in pantomime, emphasized by pokes, punches, pinches, shakes, and kicks, This wee slave loses all relationship with his fellows and the world about him.

Then he describes some of the other children he met, and here is an instance he gives. I want to say to the Senator from Georgia, about this evil being sporadic, that if I had given a large number of figures it would have been said there is no inhumanity in that. It is a good thing for children to work, we hear. "I worked," one Senator says, "and I have succeeded," etc.

So I have given specific instances, which I stated at the beginning of this speech were typical, because I wanted to place the finger on definite cases, at definite places, and just what a child 6 years old working twelve hours a day does, and what such labor means. That is the reason I have read these descriptions that shock the Senator and will shock the

Mr. Hubbard grows specific and particular. He says-and under oath, don't forget that:

I thought to lift one of the little toilers to ascertain his weight. Straightway through his 35 pounds of skin and bones there ran a tremor of fear, and he struggled forward to tie a broken thread. I attracted his attention by a touch and offered him a silver dime. He looked at me dumbly, from a face that might have belonged to a man of 60, so furrowed, tightly drawn, and full of pain it was.

That sounds precisely like the description that Durland gives, that Roberts gives, that Spargo gives, and that Mrs. Kelley gives, that Mrs. Van Vorst gives, that Miss Ashley gives. Can it be that all these men and women, as high grade as any in this country, have made a mistake, have told an untruth, and then made affidavit to it?

They say these are typical and not occasional. But of course all these people, who probably never saw one another, and who investigated independently, agreed in some mysterious way, some psychical way, to tell the same lie, and then, acting separately, have the audacity to swear to that lie. So Mr. Hubbard goes on :

He did not reach for the money. He did not know what it was. I tried to stroke his head and caress his cheek. My smile of friendship meant nothing to him. He shrank from my touch as though he expected punishment. A caress was unknown to this child, sympathy had never been his portion, and the love of a mother, who only a short time before held him in her arms, had all been forgotten in the whir of wheels and the awful silence of a din that knows no respite.

There were dozens of just such children in this particular mill.

It was not "isolated" in that instance, as the Senator from Geograp ways. But of course all this is false—how could it.

Georgia says. But, of course, all this is false—how could it be true of "our best people," who are the mill owners, according to the Senator from Georgia?

A physician who was with me said that they would all be dead probably in two years and their places filled with others. There were plenty more.

And a manufacturer in my own town voiced the spirit that animates most men who take a position like the head of this mill took. He said, "We are a prolific race. If they die there will be plenty more." But, Mr. President, think as you like, I say that is not the way we are going to conduct the American Republic from this time forward.

Mr. President, I intend to read no more upon this particular point, because I see it is already getting late.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

THE OUTRAGE A NATIONAL, NOT A SECTIONAL, ONE.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will not omit to put into the Record any well-authenticated statements from respectable and honest people that will bear upon this evil. Every thoughtful man recognizes it as a very great evil, and I will go as far as any man in trying to stamp it out in a legitimate and constitutional way. I hope the Senator will not omit, as I said a while ago, to get all well-authenticated facts into the Record, so that we may have ammunition with which to begin crusades at home to keep our legislatures from being influenced by northern millionaires who have gone down there and built mills and made industrial slaves out of white children instead of the chattel black slaves of the old days. I will join the Senator if he can show me how to do it here constitutionally.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the observation the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has just made beyond a doubt is to a certain extent correct. There is northern money in South Carolina; and God help South Carolina if there was not northern money there. [Applause in the galleries.]

want to add one further suggestion on that point.

Elbert Hubbard has been quoted in this discussion. his statement was not read in full. I sometimes read the fulminations of that very versatile man, and I recall very distinctly that in one of Elbert Hubbard's articles he stated that the parents in the South demanded that the children should work in the mills, and that they were infinitely more to blame than the men who furnished the capital to run the mills.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is no doubt about that.
Mr. GALLINGER. I think it is well for us to put that fact in the Record as well as the fact the Senator from South Carolina suggested.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In just a moment. I want to say that my study of this question, which has been somewhat careful, confirms that; but the infamy of the murder of children is not to be excused on account of the infamy of parents who are willing to see them work. There is no question about that. The mill owner, however, ought not to satisfy his conscience by what he knows to be a perjured certificate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me? Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I will allow you.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know there are fathers and mothers in South Carolina as well as there are elsewhere who to my mind occupy the relation toward their children of cannibals, who force them to get up before day and go to work, while they, especially the father, sit around and loaf and live off their children's labor. But I do not see the force of the sneer of the Senator from New Hampshire in saying God help South Carolina if there was no northern money there. I will say to that Senator that rather than have northern money go there and exercise its lobbying influences through the instrumentalities of mill presidents and directors and others who go to the legislature and maneuver and manipulate and manage to keep proper child-labor laws from being enacted, I wish that he and all others who can keep northern money away would keep it away from the State.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not going to take up any more time—and it is purely a question of time—in presenting testi-I have not produced half that I have at hand, and certainly I presented enough in my half to show to the Senate and to the country the widespread nature of this evil.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the Senator not to omit anything that is well authenticated and honest. Publish it all in a document, so that we can have it to circulate among the good men and women of the South and help us to organize a crusade to stop this hellishness.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator said that before. I am going to publish it so that the American people can tell the American Congress to pass a law that will stop it now in South Carolina, Pennsylvania, and everywhere else, and I am going to ask the Senator to vote for such a law, if I can show him by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that such a law-would be constitutional.

Mr. TILLMAN. I shall listen to the Senator with great interest when he comes to the constitutional argument, but until he convinces me and other Senators that the power of Congress under the interstate-commerce clause reaches to a matter like this I think he will find great difficulty in passing such a law through this body, because there are others who, like myself, believe that Congress has nothing to do with the police regulations of the States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will undertake to prove that to the Senator, unless he is in the condition of a man who "convinced against his will is of the same opinion still."

Mr. TILLMAN. I will listen.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has expressed his opinion upon the constitutionality of this proposed law. Has the Senator read the decisions of the Supreme Court upon this question? Mr. TILLMAN. No.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And yet you have an opinion upon it, which it will be difficult for me to change, and I have read those decisions.

Mr. TILLMAN. But I have a very strong opinion, based on general common sense-

Oh, well. Mr. BEVERIDGE.

Mr. TILLMAN. That the Constitution reserves to the States the police power, and that the matter of dealing with the health and morals of the people is a police regulation and outside the If the Senator thinks he can convince jurisdiction of Congress. me that I am wrong, I will listen to his argument.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will attempt to do that when I come to I am not going to produce any more of these statements. have here marked statements as to its effect upon health, as to the effect upon the morals, as to its effect upon degeneracy, and all that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Print it as a document, if you please.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am going to print it in my speech. I am much obliged to the Senator. I ask leave, Mr. President, to have printed as a part of my speech these extracts which I intended to read. It will simply save time. I have a vast deal of other testimony which I will produce on another phase of this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

(The matter referred to appears in subsequent parts of Mr. Beveringe's remarks under appropriate headings.)

Mr. CARMACK, Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly. Mr. CARMACK. The Senator has spoken of conditions in various States, and he referred to the law in Tennessee as being an admirable law.

Mr. BEVERIDGE.

Mr. CARMACK. Has the Senator any information that that law is defective in its operation?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No.

Mr. SPOONER. Allow me to say to the Senator from Tennessee that we can not hear him.

Mr. CARMACK. I want to state that so far as one State is concerned no Federal legislation is needed to bring about this

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will show the Senator that it is, and I will now tell him why.

Mr. CARMACK. Not so far as Tennessee is concerned.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; and I will show the Senator why when I come to the point, which will be in a moment, if he will let me proceed in orderly fashion with my argument. to call the Senator's attention to a fact, and he can think about it, so as to be able to interrupt me when I come to it. I want to say to the Senator and all Senators that I am only too delighted to give way at any time to any Senator for a question upon any point. I am as earnest about this matter, I think, as he can be, and if at any point I am wrong on a question of fact or a question of law I want to be interrupted. say to the Senator, so that he can be thinking about it-

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think he is any more earnest in the discussion of child labor than the remainder of his colleagues?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I think a good deal more earnest.
Mr. SPOONER. I doubt the Senator's accuracy.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think I am—a good deal more. I have been earnest enough to spend nights and days and weeks and months in accumulating testimony. I have been earnest enough to appeal to the American people all over this country during the last campaign, from as far west as Nebraska to as far east Has the Senator done as much?

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me a suggestion?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will. Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator mistakes zeal for earnestness. That he is very zealous we undoubtedly know, but I deny that he is more earnest than I am and than all other Senators are.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator give the distinction be-tween "zeal" and "earnestness?' Of course I can not yield to the Senator to indulge in any refinements as to the meaning of words. We both know that good and bad State laws make business inequality.

I want to say to the Senator from Tennessee what I was going to say when the Senator from Wisconsin interrupted me. The manufacturers of the Senator's own State have by the very righteousness of your State laws been put at a commercial disadvantage with the manufacturers of Georgia, Alabama, South and North Carolina, because the manufacturers of your State can not longer employ cheap labor. They can not longer make the blood of children into gold, and that can be done by every manufacturer in these other States.

That is the trouble with the whole thing. I shall submit in a moment, when I come to present that particular question, the affidavit of a man who testifies to having been on a train that was carrying a "shipment" of children from Tennessee, where they can not be worked, to the cotton mills of other Southern States, where they can be worked.

Mr. President, we have seen that the evil exists. We have seen that it is not "isolated," as the Senator from Georgia We have examined instances which are typical, which are not two, five, six, ten, a dozen, a hundred, but thousands. We have all this given to us by men and women who have made oath that they themselves personally investigated the facts.

EFFECT OF CHILD LABOR ON HEALTH.

Now, what does it mean? In the first place, Mr. President, I have read one or two statements, under oath, that it means the literal death of these children. I have here, and shall put into the RECORD, abundant statements that it means the physical ruin, the mental and moral ruin, of these children themselves who are now being worked.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] is an able physician, and he knows, as every other physician knows, the result of nervous exhaustion on a child put to work at from 6 or 8 years of age and kept at work for twelve hours a day amid the whirl of flying machinery or the terrors of coal breakers. If they live through it, they are permanently ruined in body and mind and soul. That is a mere physical fact.

I wish here at this point in my remarks to insert statements and affidavits of physicians; also statements of other investigators from whom I have already read on other phases of this evil.

DOCTOR FREIBERG'S OPINION.

First, I will present the views of Dr. Albert H. Freiberg, of Cincinnati, Ohio, whose name is familiar to the profession throughout the country. I here send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read Dr. Freiberg's affidavit.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CINCINNATI, January 21, 1907.

Hon. Senator Albert J. Beveridge, Washington, D. C.

Hon. Senator Albert J. Beveridge, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I wish to certify to you certain facts regarding a paper which I read before the recent meeting of the National Child Labor Committee in Cincinnati December 14, 1906. The paper was entitled "Some of the ultimate physical effects of premature toil." This paper embodies the result of my experience with children of the working classes during thirteen years of professional experience devoted particularly to the specialty of orthopedic surgery. This concerns itself with the deformities of the human body, both congenital and acquired. The statements made therein were made bona fide and are true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

During the period above referred to I have occupied a number of hospital positions in this city as orthopedic surgeon. At present I am orthopedic surgeon to the Cincinnati Hospital and to the Jewish Hospital of Cincinnati. I am also professor of orthopedic surgery in the University of Cincinnati (medical department) and am also a fellow of the American Orthopedic Association.

I therefore confirm under oath the belief that the statements made in the paper before mentioned are true and also the belief that they will correspond with the experience of others equally well qualified.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now I present extracts from Doctor Freiberg's address on "Some of the ultimate physical effects of premature toil:"

It may be of interest to call attention to certain effects of a purely physical character which professional experience has for years been accustomed to look upon as the results of environment and occupation, and especially when considered with reference to the physical peculiarities of the child between the ages of 10 and 16 years. In doing this, effort will be made to avoid that which is purely technical, but also the control of the play hours in the development of the young child, his innate desire for physical activity and especially in the open, are well recognized by all laymen, and there are few indeed who will not acknowledge how important these are in promoting the formative ment that this natural desire for movement and exercise can not be balked in the child 8 to 10 years of age, without damage to his physical progress, will meet with little protest, and for the present discussion this is of minor importance, since by far the greater number of children at work have at least passed their tenth year, and since no State, whose statutes do not ignore the question altogether, has ventured to year of the child arrives at its twelfth year, however, it enters a period which, lasting until its seventeenth year as a rule, is characterized not only by those changes of disposition, of mind and soul, of body and appearance, embraced by the term "puberty," but a period also during which the body expertently have been described by any disposition of the child arrives at its spid and, the miscles must, however, increase not only in length but in volume if their strength is to be proportionate to the ever-increasing demands made upon them. That his increase of volume, therefore, of strength, is dependent upon exercise, is common knowledge; that lack of use causes wasting and there increases on only in length but in volume if their strength is to be proportionate to the ever-increasing de the future of the individual, after the period of immaturity has passed and the child has become the citizen and has assumed the responsibilities of parentage.

Whatever can be shown to now permanently impair wage-earning capacity or to interfere with the performance of family duties, or indeed to shorten the tenure of life, will be acknowledged by all to be of prime importance. I shall not refer to such conditions as general weakness or diminished chest capacity and the tendency to acquire disease in consequence thereof, but rather to certain definite deformities which I have had frequent opportunity for observing, both in process of the present the various occupations of tolling children may be grouped according as the work is done in standing or sitting position. In general—and there are, of course, many exceptions—boy's work requires standing and girl's work sitting. It may also be said, in the same general way, that the work which the boy does standing is an apprenticeship for work which the man also does, as a journeyman, in the standing position.

This is correspondingly true of girl's work. Standing occupations naturally involve the feet and legs in greatest strain, and more escent years, that condition known as ewdevloying, during the adolescent years, that condition known as ewdevloying, during the adolescent years, that condition known as ewdevloying, during the adolescent years, though it may be disabling and painful in high degree, but rarely assumes the severe form so frequently seven in the later period of adolescence as a sad testimony of the child's experience.

Commonly, the foot loses its strength and shape gradually; so that at this time but little notice is taken of it. Later, when the child has apparent, the feet only the recessity for continuous employment is apparent, the feet only in the period of prematurity, for while medical science can do much for these unfortunates, they are often debarred from continuing in trades requiring constant standing.

Frequently upon coming under medical gree.

I shall not discuss the deformity in detail except to say that when assuming the severe grades under discussion it effects reach far beyond the spine itself, which bends not simply to one side or the other, but is always markedly twisted on its vertical axis also. In this twist the chest participates fully, so that not only is its power of expansion greatly interfered with, but its capacity is reduced and much crowding and displacement of the vital organs contained within can be determined.

and displacement of the vital organs contained within can be determined.

Small wonder, then, that such severe degree of lateral curvature adds greatly to the likelihood of developing pulmonary consumption, and that the heart can not be thus pushed aside with impunity. It has been ascertained that, for these reasons, the duration of life of individuals with severe lateral curvature is far below the average. The remoter effect of the deformity upon the pelvis of the girl I need only mention to the extent of saying that here, too, a distortion and diminution of normal capacity frequently results, so that this has always been recognized by medical men as of potentially serious influence upon the maternal function.

In conclusion, it is to be said that these deformities are by no means confined exclusively to the one sex or the other; neither is it to be interpreted that they occur in every child who works, or even in the greater number. It is asserted, however, that these deformities in the severe forms before referred to are particularly frequent among toiling children or those who have toiled as children.

That the unfavorable influences of premature toil are only too often augmented by unfortunate home influences, by dwellings that are unfit, by insufficient and improper food, does not after the case. I have aimed to speak of these deformities in particular because of their serious nature and because I have had abundant opportunity for observing them. On the other hand, it is not to be overlooked that these are by no means the only, or even the most common, evidences of physical deterioration to be observed among working children.

SPARGO ON RUIN OF HEALTH.

As to the effect of this work on health, here is the testimony, all supported by the affidavits already given, by Spargo, in his Bitter Cry of the Children, on pages 175-178:

It is a sorry but indisputable fact that where children are employed the most unhealthful work is generally given them. In the spinning and carding rooms of cotton and woolen mills, where large upnmbers of children are employed, clouds of lint dust fill the lungs and menace the health.

The children have often a distressing cough, caused by the irritation of the throat, and many are hoarse from the same cause.

In bottle factories and other branches of glass manufacture the atmosphere is constantly charged with microscopic particles of glass. In the woodworking industries, such as the manufacture of cheap farniture and wooden boxes and packing cases, the air is laden with the server of th farinture and wooden boxes and packing cases, the air is laten with the sawdust.

Children employed in soap and soap-powder factories work, many of them, in clouds of alkaline dust, which inflames the eyelids and nostrils. Boys employed in filling boxes of soap powder work all day long with handkerchiefs tied over their mouths.

In the coal mines the breaker boys breathe air that is heavy and thick with particles of coal, and their lungs become black in consequence.

In the coal mines the breaker boys breathe air that is heavy and thick with particles of coal, and their lungs become black in consequence.

In the manufacture of felt hats little girls are often employed at the machines which tear the fur from the skins of rabbits and other animals. Recently I stood and vatched a young girl working at such a machine. She wore a newspaper pinned over her head and a handkerchief tied over her mouth.

She was white with dust from head to feet, and when she stooped to pick anything from the floor the dust would fall from her paper head-covering in little heaps.

About 7 feet from the mouth of the machine was a window through which poured thick volumes of dust as it was belehed out from the machine. I placed a sheet of paper on the inner sill of the window and in twenty minutes it was covered with a layer of fine dust half an inch deep.

Yet that girl works midway between the window and the machine, in the very center of the volume of dust, sixty hours a week.

These are a few of the occupations in which the dangers arise from the forced inhalation of dust.

In some occupations, such as silk winding, flax spinning, and various processes in the manufacture of felt hats, it is necessary, or believed to be necessary, to keep the atmosphere quite moist. The result of working in a close, heared factory, where the air is artificially moistened, in summer time can be better imagined than described. So long as enough girls can be kept working, and only a few of them faint, the mills are kept going; but when faintings are so many and so frequent that it does not pay to keep going the mills are closed.

The children who work in the dye rooms and print shops of textile factories and the color rooms of factories where the materials for making artificial flowers are manufactured are subject to contact with poisonous dyes, and the results are often terrible. Very frequently they are dyed in parts of their bodies as literally as the fabrica dyed.

One little fellow, who was employed in a Pennsylv they are dyed in parts of their bodies as literally as the fabrics are dyed.

One little fellow, who was employed in a Pennsylvania carpet factory, opened his shirt one day and showed me his chest and stomach dyed a deep, rich crimson. I mentioned the incident to a local physician and was told that such cases were common.

"They are simply saturated with the dye," he said. "The results are extremely severe, though very often slow and for a long time almost imperceptible. If they should cut or scratch themselves where they are so thoroughly dyed, it might mean death."

In Yonkers, N. Y., are some of the largest carpet factories in the United States, and many children are employed in them. Some of the smallest children are employed in the "drum room," or print shop, where the yarns are "printed" or dyed.

Small boys, mostly Slavs and Hungarians, push the trucks containing boxes of liquid dye from place to place, and get it all over their clothing. They can be seen coming out of the mills at night literally soaked to the skin with dyes of various colors. In the winter time, after a fall of snow, it is possible to track them to their homes not only by their colored footprints, but by the drippings from their clothing. The snow becomes dotted with red, blue, and green, as though some one had sprinkled the colors for the sake of the varlegated effect.

The effects of the employment of young boys in glass factories, especially by night, are injurious from every possible point of view. The constant facing of the glare of the furnaces and the red-hot bottles causes serious injury to the sight; minor accidents from burning are common.

Even more serious than the accidents are those physical disorders induced by the conditions of employment. Boys who work at night do not as a rule get sufficient or satisfactory rest by day. Very often they can not sleep because of the noises made by younger children in and around the house; more often, perhaps, they prefer to play rather than to sleep. Indeed, most boys seem to prefer night work, for the reason that it gives them the chance to play during the daytime.

Then you will find further on that when children like these reach the age of 17 and 18 they are utterly exhausted and almost worthless.

most worthless.

Even where the mothers are careful and solicitous, they find it practically impossible to control boys who are wage-earners and feel themselves to be independent. This lack of proper rest, added to the heat and strain of their work, produces nervous dyspepsia.

From working in drafty sheds, where they are often, as one boy said to me in Zanesville, Ohio, "burning on the side against the furnace and pretty near freezing on the other."

They are frequently subject to rheumatism. Going from the heated factories to their homes, often a mile or so distant, perspiring and improperly clad, with their vitality at its lowest ebb, they fall ready victims to pneumonia and to its heir, the great white plague.

In almost every instance when I have asked local physicians for their experience, they have named these as the commonest physical results. Of the fearful moral consequences there can be no question.

The glass blowers themselves realize this, and even more than the physical deterioration, it prevents them from taking their own children into the glasshouses. One practically never finds the son of a glass blower employed as a "snapper-up" or "carrying in boy" unless the father is dead or incapacitated by reason of sickness.

"I'd sooner see my boy dead than working here. You might as well give a boy to the devil at once as send him to a glass factory," said one blower to me in Glassboro, N. J.; and that is the spirit in which most of the men regard the matter.

DOCTOR ROBERTS ON CHILD LABOR AND HEALTH.

As to the effect on health, Dr. Peter Roberts, in his article on "Child labor in eastern Pennsylvania" in the Outlook of December 17, 1904, volume 78 of Outlook, September-December, 1904, on page 984, says:

Can anyone say what thirteen or fourteen hours a day means to these young boys and girls? In my investigation I saw two or three of the wrecks. One young girl in her seventeenth year had been earning $9 and $10 a week, working from seventy to seventy-five hours. She had done it for three years, and is now broken in health and spirits. Another girl, 18 years of age, having worked for six years in a silk mill, said: "I used to be stout and strong, but now I'm poor enough." Doctor Weaver, of Easton, who has for the last ten years practiced among the operatives of a hosiery mill which employs some 1,200 hands, said: "Girls when they have been in that mill from 12 years of age to 20 are not much good after."

Upon girls of tender years the blight of factory life falls heaviest. The boy may be stunted or he may grow disproportionately, but the effect upon the mere delicate organism of the female is disastrous and cruel.

Sixty hours a week is more than the average child of tender years can stand, but add another ten hours' overtime and the pressure works disastrously.

Dr. Samuel Davies, president of the State board of health of Pennsylvania, said: "Factory girls soon wilt, and they ill discharge the functions of maternity." Is it surprising?

MISS ASHBY ON CHILD BUIN.

Miss Irene M. Ashby, in her article on "Child labor in southern cotton mills," published in the World's Work, volume 2, pages 1292–1293, testifies to the result of this labor on the health of children in the following words:

children in the following words:

The flying lint often brings on throat and lung trouble, while pneumonia resulting from the sudden change from the hot factory to the early morning and the late evening mists is not uncommon. These conditions tell far more frequently and fatally on the unformed constitutions of children than on the grown workers.

In one factory I found a little girl aged 10, in the "drawing-in" room, where every individual thread of the warp is drawn through the "harness" of the weaving loom. She could earn as much sometimes as 75 cents a day, though, alas, at the expense of the beautiful blue eyes she turned up to me as I spoke to her.

Her mother told me that she brought her youngest daughter, aged 7, luto the mill with her, and although urged to allow her to work, there being many as small in the mill, she would not allow it. Yet without doing any work the child had lost in weight in a year through confinement in the mill atmosphere. Over and over again I was told that the mill was a "playground."

"If anyone tells you that," said a superintendent to me with concentrated scorn, "he either doesn't know what he's talking about or he's telling a downright lie. I've been in the mill since I was 8 years old myself, and I know. We're no charity institution."

"What do you do when you are very tired?" I asked a little girl, putting my mount close to her ear to make myself heard. "I cry," she said, shyly. She would make no reply when I asked her what happened then, but another child who had literally poked her head into the conversation, put in tersely, "The boss tells her to go on with her work."

DOCTOR KOBER'S VIEWS.

Here are extracts from the address of Doctor Kober, of this city, on the physical and physiological effects of child labor.

Doctor Kober says:

There is one phase of the question which strongly appeals to me, and that is the effect of premature and involuntary labor upon the health and the physical welfare of the child.

Physiologists have long since demonstrated that the muscles of the average child attain only at the age of 13 a certain amount of strength and capacity for work. Up to this time the muscular fibers contain a large per cent of water, and in consequence are very tender and immature. As a consequence of this imperfect muscular development it is not surprising that we should find such a large percentage of children engaged in workshops, factories, or even at the writing desk or the merchant counter develop lateral curvature of the spine and other muscular deformities, not to mention their general weakness and predisposition to rickets, tuberculosis, and other pulmonary diseases. All of the bad effects are, of course, very much intensified by unsanitary environments, especially when these occupations are attended by the inhalation of dust, impure air, and injurious gases.

DOCTOR HARVEY'S SWORN STATEMENT.

Dr. A. K. P. Harvey, of Washington, who was for years coroner and county physician in New Hampshire and Maine, makes oath as follows concerning his experience as to child labor upon the health:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Columbia:

United States of America, District of Columbia:

Personally appeared before, a notary public, A. K. P. Harvey, M. D., who on oath says:

That he was for several years coroner and county physician of Strafford County, N. H., also practicing and city physician of Lewiston, Me., and that he had large opportunities for the observation of Children employed in the cotton mills. That these children are especially subject to throat and lung diseases, prominent among which are chronic bronchitis, tuberculosis, and catarrh of the upper air passages, and that inflammation of the eyes is common.

That one or more pathetic features of child labor in these mills is the frequent occurrence of accidents, resulting in the maining and crippling of the little victims. That by midday these children are tired, and as the day goes by they become more and more fatigued, and hence careless of the dangers by which they are surrounded.

That he has personally treated scores, if not hundreds, of these cases, the injury ranging in severity from the simple crushing of a finger to instant death. To particularize, these accidents consist largely of fingers and hands crushed in cogwheels and other gearing.

That it is not infrequent that an arm is torn off in a machine called the "picker."

That on a visit to one of the largest mills in New Hampshire, in the summer of 1906, in calling the attention of a friend to the prevailing conditions, and standing near the main exit, were noted many children coming out who to all appearances were under 14 years of age, some even appearing as young as 12.

OTHER EVIDENCE ON HEALTH AND CHILD SLAVERY.

Mr. Durland says this about the effect of child labor on health:

Consumption, bronchial affections, anæmia are all common aliments among the children of the mills. Their vitality is sapped. They enter the period of womanhood frail and worn out. Yet these are the women expected to bear sons who will carry on great industries that the State

Mrs. Van Vorst, in the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post of May 5, 1906, says:

No doubt one of our children, were he made to work twelve hours a day, would either rise up in juvenile revolt or be carried to an early grave. But to break the spirit that is bowed and plied by accumulated generations of want and need it takes some time, even for the subtlety of the cotton-mill owner. Yet he accomplishes it. There is a wearing out among the mill hands, a gradual breaking down, an inward unhappiness, a sensibility different in kind from what ours would be under similar circumstances, because of the opposite æsthetic chord to which their tastes have been attuned, but no less than ours in degree, and keen enough to make of their lives and of their children's lives one long, slow martyrdom.

Mr. Hubberd genys—and don't forget that all this is under

Mr. Hubbard says-and don't forget that all this is under Pneumonia carries off most of them. Their systems are ripe for disease, and when it comes there is no rebound, no response. Medicine simply does not act.

But, Mr. President, perhaps in the interest of the dividends which these mill owners earn-and I shall present a book here written by one of them, showing that the poorest cotton mill in the South does not earn less than 10 and from that up to 30 per cent, and even higher-we might waive consideration of the ruin of the children themselves, but we are confronted with a far graver consequence, and that consequence is this: It is the process of the deterioration of the race. It is the production of a degenerate class in this Republic.

CHILD LABOR AND RACE DETERIORATION.

The lowest estimate now is that we are pouring into American citizenship every year at least 200,000 London "Hooligans," boys and girls, who are broken in body and stunted in mind and soul, and who know it, and who are living engines of hatred toward society—and I do not blame them—and who become the parents of still other degenerates. We all hear talk about the dangers of a certain "lower class." Had we not better do something to stop the production of that "lower class," that "dangerous class?" Anyhow I shall try to stop it.

Mr. President, what that means in national efficiency is before us. I am not indulging in the least in rhetoric any more on this point than I did before when I was giving specifications of the evil.

Great Britain is an example of precisely a condition such as I have detailed that has shocked the world. The world did not know about it. England herself did not know about it until the United Kingdom had to meet 28,000 Boer farmers in South

GREAT BRITAIN'S DEGENERACY.

Now, then, I call it to the minds of Senators. You will remember the newspaper accounts of the almost impossibility of getting soldiers for the English service. You will remember the descriptions of how small and feeble they were. You will remember the tales-true tales-of their being swept off like flies by enteric fever. It was the poorest army that that first of powers ever sent to the battlefield.

This began to come out. First there was a report on the war—just a report on the war—and in this commanding officers, in spite of their desire to make their troops appear as well as possible, which most of them tried to do, were truthful enough to say things like this. This was Professor Ogston. He saw the men from the hospital point of view. He was in I read from the official report of the charge of the hospital. war made to the British Government:

Professor Ogston, who saw the men from the hospital point of view, said that "some of the regiments, especially some of the militia regiments, were physically very inferior and more liable to disease—boys and weeds. In one expedition where a regiment was expected to take part in an advance, over 300 of them—380. I think—were sent for examination as to their physical fitness, and 212 of that part of the regiment so sent for examination were rejected as unfit to sustain the toils of a march and as being liable to disease."

Of the men recruited and attempted to be recruited an average of over 30 per cent were rejected for physical inferiority.

The director-general says that from 40 to 60 per cent of all the soldiers that England recruited for South Africa in the Boer war were unfit for service. This was not the worst. I will read the "Sessional Papers" in a moment to show the causes of rejection. Over 30 per cent of all attempted to be recruited were rejected, although the standard was purposely lowered by the British authorities.

That was not the worst. Of those accepted 2 per cent were almost immediately found unfit for military duty.

And even that was not the worst; because when they were finally in the field, it was found that large numbers of them, when it came to going to the firing line, were incapable of the march; and I just read you the statement from the Royal Report on the war itself, which led up to the investigation from which I am going to read to you in a moment, the statement of Professor Ogston that out of 380, 212 were unable to march to the front.

And still that was not the worst. Of those who actually got to the firing line, fighting with that ancient British pluck never exceeded in the history of this world, thousands were swept off like flies with enteric fever.

All this finally came out. Everybody knew about these rejections. Then there appeared the comments of the British officers, such as Professor Ogston and Lieut. Gen. Sir Archibald Hunter, who said:

But if you get a town-bred population, as most of ours are that enlist now, you have to take them out into the country and show them what is what, and try and teach them what is on the other side of a hill

Then he said again, speaking of recruiting in Scotland:

Most of the recruits are at present artisans, factory hands, miners, casual laborers, and the proportion drawn from the agricultural class is very small.

ENORMOUS PERCENTAGE RÉJECTIONS IN BOER WAR,

It would not have done any good to have tried to get them from the agricultural class, as I shall show in a moment.

Then here are the Sessional Papers of the British Government, showing these rejections which got onto the conscience of the nation, and which startled British statesmen as nothing has startled them in a hundred years. Number medically inspected in 1897, 59,986; total rejections, 22,813; 1898, 66,501 medically inspected; number rejected, 23,287.

I want to pause right here and say that even that does not represent the number of rejections. These were the rejections only of those who were taken by the recruiting officers and medically inspected. But the statement is made in these Sec. medically inspected. But the statement is made in these Sessional Papers and reports that vast numbers of men were rejected offhand by the recruiting officers and never were medically inspected at all.

But of those who were "passed" by the recruiting officers and afterwards medically inspected, an average of more than 33 per cent were rejected. In 1899, 68,059 were medically inspected, and 23,393 rejected. In 1900, 84,402 were medically inspected, and 23,105 were rejected. In 1901 there were 76,750 medically inspected, and 22,286 were rejected. I will not take further time in reading these things that led up to the investigation of the physical deterioration of the British people, because I want to get to that itself.

The statement is here made-I read from the British Sessional Papers-

When examining these totals it must be borne in mind that they do not represent anything like the total number of the rejections of candidates for enlistment into the army. A large number of men are rejected by the recruiters themselves for the causes above mentioned, and in consequence are never medically inspected, and do not appear in any returns.

The cause of these rejections were undersize, narrow chest, bad teeth, bad vision, flat feet, and other causes that showed physical and racial deterioration.

Now, then, when this was brought home to the attention of the British nation and of the world, as I said a moment ago, it startled the British statesmen as nothing had startled them for a hundred years, because they were suddenly face to face with the fact that the United Kingdom, with over 40,000,000 people, found herself hard put to it to raise 320,000 British soldiers to meet 28,000 Boer farmers upon the field of battle.

They were suddenly face to face with the fact that, upon land, England has not the men to meet any first-class nation in the world.

They were suddenly confronted with the fact that while they had become the mistress of the seas in commerce, they had sunk into a low place in manhood and stamina, which is the foundation of all commerce and of all greatness of every kind.

REPORT OF THE ROYAL COMMISSION.

And so a commission was appointed to examine into and report upon the causes of this physical deterioration of the British people, and here it is in my hand [exhibiting]. It is very voluminous. I intended to read at some length from it, but I will not, because time is so short. I will state rather the conclusions after I give one or two items. Doctor Neston, of Newcastle, said:

There is an undoubted falling off in the physical condition of the infants vaccinated and young persons presented for employment during the last quarter of a century, and this is due to the fact that they are the offspring of town-bred parents, who produce sui generis.

Mr. Harry Wilson, inspector of factories, said:

Personally the poorest specimens of humanity I have ever seen, both men and women, are working in the preparing and spinning departments of certain Dundee jute mills.

This is the report I am reading from:

Another factor in the alleged deterioration of the people, connected like the last with their aggregation in towns, is said to be the withdrawal from the rural districts of the most capable of the population, leaving the inferior types to supply their place and continue the stock, the evil being often aggravated, in the opinion of some, by the drifting into the country of the debilitated town population, which is crowded out by the inrush of more vigorous elements.

Mr. President, in order to save time I shall ask leave to put into the Record extracts from this report.

CHILD LABOR CAUSE OF BRITISH DETERIORATION.

It was found that a general physical deterioration of the people, which had been revealed first by the lamentable lack of ability to meet the Boers in the field, did exist. It was found that its immediate and present causes were poverty, overcrowding, living in towns, insufficient nourishment, and inherited tendencies. But anyone who has studied the question knows what the cause of that is,

It began in England one hundred and fifty years ago and bore its fruit later in the Boer war. It began in England with the invention of the spinning machines. It began one hundred and fifty years ago, and precisely the same process that is going on in Pennsylvania, in New York, in South Carolina, in Georgia, in North Carolina, in West Virginia, in New Jersey, and other States of the American Republic to-day in 1907 were going on in England a hundred and fifty years ago.

CHILD LABOR IN AMERICA IN 1907 EXACT REPRODUCTION OF CHILD LABOR IN ENGLAND IN 1800.

As soon as the factories started up in England in the eighteenth century the mill owners found themselves in precisely the condition that the southern mill owners find their factories to-They used precisely the same arguments to get the children into the mills. They soon found that the nimble fingers of the children could do the work of attending the machines better than those of old people. Also they soon found that children were more "tractable," more easily "managed," and they found, above all other things, that they were cheaper,

And so, first-all Senators are familiar with that, of course the orphanages were emptied into the mills, and then the country was invaded by the mill owners, just as to-day in the Southern States the hill people are being drawn from their farms to the factories.

The strongest people from the country were induced to go to the factory towns. They left the inferior country people on the farms to run the farms and raise up the future yeomanry of the

And these stronger young men and young women coming into the factories soon degenerated in health, and they produced children who were weaker still than they were, and so the process went on from bad to worse until seventy-five years later, nearly all the population of England in the meantime having become an urban population, a mill-working population, the great irresistible causes of degeneration had done their work, and when the Boer war came England was hard put to it to raise from among 40,000,000 people 320,000 able soldiers to meet the Boers on the field of battle.

Now, Mr. President, just to show how absolutely similar were the conditions in England one hundred years ago to those we have here; to show that exactly the same process went on there both as to legislation and physical deterioration that is going on here; to show that exactly the same arguments were used by manufacturers and those who stood for them in England one hundred years ago that are being used to-day almost in exact words, I want to quote very briefly from this History of Factory Legislation in England, which is perhaps the most complete work of its kind that has ever been written. I have just read you some horrible details about what is existing in this country now. Here is a statement as to the working hours of children, before 1800, in England:

In the framework knitting trade hours were said to be from 5 or 6 a.m. till 10 at night, and large numbers of women and children were thus employed.

Then in 1796 Doctor Percival, of Manchester, laid before the board of health of that town some considerations.

It appears that the children and others who work in the large cotton factories are peculiarly disposed to be affected by the contagion of fever, and that when such infection is received it is rapidly propagated, etc.

Then he goes on to say:

The large factories are generally injurious to the constitution of those employed in them.

Then he says:

The untimely labor of the night and the protracted labor of the day, with respect to children, sot only tends to diminish future expectations as to the general sum of life and industry by impairing the strength and destroying the vital stamina of the rising generation, but it too often gives encouragement to idleness, extravagance, and profligacy in the parents, who, contrary to the order of nature, subsist by the oppres-sion of their offspring.

ENGLAND'S REFORMERS BEGAN A CENTURY AGO.

There gradually grew up in England a hundred years ago an agitation such as there is growing up in America now. It was resisted. It was resisted by the factory owners just exactly as the agitation is now being resisted by the factory owners. impossible to go into it at this late hour. Sir Robert Peel began the reform of it in 1802. He did not succeed very well; but finally he got the Peel bill passed.

Then it was succeeded by the agitation which resulted in the Sadler bill, which limited the hours of work to ten hours. A very singular thing occurred, and I can not help referring to it now, we are so precisely paralleling the experience of England. The manufacturers resisted the Sadler bill in every way they could. Finally they said: "This bill is being passed upon 'vague' representations; it is being passed at the clamor of working people; let us 'investigate' it; let the whole subject be investigated."

Of course they knew it would take a year or two in which to "investigate," and in the meantime their enormous profits would Many great fortunes in England to-day are founded upon that system. No wonder England, having thus sowed the wind, is now reaping the whirlwind.

So they asked that the thing might be "investigated," and they carried their point. But so terrible were the conditions, and the report of that investigation committee had so terribly alarmed them, that they aligned themselves for the purpose of delaying and, if possible, defeating action on that report; for the report showed conditions even worse than they were represented, just as the report of the "investigation" in this crime here in America and in the twentieth century will show the Nation, if it is honest.

JOHN ASHLEY, EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.

Finally the cause of those English children was taken up by a man whom everybody who reads the English language and knows anything about English history or human industrialism knows and loves and applauds-John Ashley, Earl of Shaftesbury. He gave his whole life to it. He gave up his official place; society turned against him; his rich associates reviled him. He was of the noblest nobility of England itself, but they all deserted him. "Shaftesbury," said England's "better classes"—England's "best people," to repeat the favorite phrase of the Senator from Georgia—"Shaftesbury," said they, "has taked the theory class." joined the 'lower class.

Nevertheless he gave his life to the curing of this infamy, and to-day John Ashley, Earl of Shaftesbury, is one of the proudest names in English history. When the name of Marlborough is forgotten and when the name of Wellington shall have become a menory the name of John Ashley, Earl of Shaftesbury, will glow, with ever-increasing radiance, in the permanent heaven of mankind's regard.

They did not succeed in stopping that evil for seventy-five years—these English "reformers," these English sympathizers with the despised "common people," these English lovers of humanity—and it was not until perhaps twenty-five years ago that the evil was entirely ended. The methods of resisting the reforms that are put forward here to-day were put forward there a hundred years ago, and down until a generation ago. Close your eyes, listen to the arguments against ending this practice that you will shortly hear here in the United States Senate in 1907, and you can imagine yourself in the British Parliament eighty years ago.

Does any man think that England pursued a wise policy? I hold in my hand here, which I will read later on this afternoon, the original notes of the statements of some of the mill owners in the Senator's State of North Caroling, where they resisted the passage of a law for the compulsory education of children and improvements over North Carolina's wretched child-labor bill, all of which the manufacturers of North Carolina defeated.

One of them goes on to say: "We want more mills. It is all right to work the children. They say that England is building more mills, and she has become the money center of the world and the commercial mistress of the seas." A manufacturer and the commercial mistress of the seas." A manufacturer said substantially that in a statement which I will read, when he was resisting and defeating a child-labor bill in North Carolina.

ENGLAND'S HIGH PRICE FOR BECOMING "THE MONEY CENTER OF THE WORLD,"

Well, Mr. President, that is what England has done. She has become "the money center of the world," and she has become "the commercial mistress of the seas." But does any-But does anybody think that she has not paid too high a price? Does any-body think that the proud eminence upon which she stands in commerce and trade has not been bought too dearly when it has been bought at the sacrifice of men and women?

The Boer war can teach us a lesson as well as it taught England a lesson. England can not meet on land a single first-class power to-day. That is the price she paid for becoming "the commercial mistress of the seas." Gone is that splendid yeomanry which under the Iron Duke overwhelmed the veterans of Austerlitz and bowed to the dust the forehead of the greatest captain of the world. Gone is that splendid stock that produced a Shakespeare and a Milton, and a Thackeray and a Dickens; that produced an Arkwright; that produced the great statesmen of the past. There is not to-day a single English soldier, statesman, or writer who comes even up to the arms of the great Englishmen of yesterday. The English people paid too high a price when they gave their children to make the English mill owners the greatest capitalists in the world.

I respect capital as much as anyone. I respect property as much as any man. I like to see wealth grow and expand, both individually and nationally, but I tell you we are thinking too much about money as money. We are thinking too much about prosperity as prosperity. The chief use of prosperity is not to put food in your stomachs or clothes on your backs or a roof over your heads. That is an important use; but the great use of prosperity is that it gives you time and strength to think on righteousness and write conscience into laws without ruining

Now, Mr. President, there is the consequence not only of the labor of children to-day, not only the rula of their lives, but the certain deterioration and the establishment of an ever-increasing degenerate class in America.

Mr. President, it has got to stop. I infer from what I have heard here in the interruptions that everybody agrees it has got to stop. As a matter of fact, I have never seen any human reform proposed in this Senate that everybody was not "for" it, but most were against any effective means of accomplishing We are confronted now with a proposition. I have heard it whispered about the corridors, and so have other Senators, that we must not go "too fast;" that we are bound to have an "investigation."

Oh, no; let us not go "too fast." The evidence is before the Senate of the slow murder of these children, not by tens or hundreds, but by the thousands. But let us not "hasten" to their relief "too fast." Let us "investigate," just as the manufacturers of England asked when they were confronted with the same kind of a reform. "Why not investigate?" said they.

Now, Mr. President, it has got to be stopped and stopped now.

We all agree upon that—anyhow, everybody says that he agrees it must be stopped; "only," says some, "let us be careful about the Constitution." The Constitution, it appears, is a very mysterious instrument. But never mind; child labor has got to be How? The States can not stop it. At the beginning of the discussion of the State part of this matter I wish the Senator from South Carolina and the other Senators who apparently intend to oppose this bill to end the evil in their sections of the country, as well as in the North, were here.

"STATES RIGHTS" NOT INVOLVED.

I hear that "States rights" is to be used as the excuse for killing this bill. I say there are no "States rights" involved in this bill. I see the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER] making a remark to another Senator upon that statement. If the Senator thinks there are some "States rights" in this bill which prohibits the transportation in interstate commerce of the products of child labor, why did not the Senator think there were some "States rights" in his bill for prohibiting the transportation in interstate commerce of the boll weevil and the gypsy moth?

Mr. President, something has been said more or less all along about "States rights." But suppose States rights were involved a little bit. Last year we passed the quarantine law. For a hundred years the subject of quarantine has been universally recognized to be exclusively within the province of the States. The effect of the law last year was to make it a national quarantine system. There was not a bit of resistance to it. The people were not willing to quibble; the people were not willing to make a strained construction of the Constitution when yellow fever was knocking at the gates. There was no resistance in the Senate. There was some resistance in the House, made purely upon the "States rights" proposition that it was the province of the State, and that the National Government was taking the right to quarantine from the States. I was could not see, as he had seen, the ravages of yellow fever down there and "quibble about the Constitution."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the extract referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The extract referred to is as follows:

The extract referred to is as follows:

Mr. Davey of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, it is not my desire or my intention to delay a vote on this motion. I desire to assure the House that this is one of the most important subjects now before Congress in which our people of the State of Louisiana are interested. If gentlemen who have taken part in this debate had gone through a yellow-fever epidemic, as I have, they would not stand here upon technicalities. I have taken part in every yellow-fever epidemic since my birth during the great epidemic of 1853. I have seen sights that I hope no Member of this House will ever see. I have seen them dead.

Mr. Speaker, there is no law strong enough for me to vote for that would keep the yellow-fever plague from the boundaries of the United States. The people of Louisiana to-day are feeling unrestful about the coming season. It is not that the quarantine time is coming, but it is here, and unless there be some relief given within a very sohrt time, it would be useless, as it could do no good.

Now, Mr. Speaker, so that I may not waste the time of the House, I ask for a vote on this question. [Applause.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the spirit of a humane man; but

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the spirit of a humane man; but if we could speak thus for a bill to kill yellow fever, how much more should we speak for a bill to kill child labor?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Georgia? Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. BACON. I will not take but a minute of the Senator's time. I wish simply to say that the Senator is mistaken as to the provisions of the quarantine law. It is purely a maritime quarantine law. It goes to the extent of exclusion from the country, but, so far as interstate matters are concerned, the quarantine law has no provision whatsoever. On the contrary, when it passed

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I definitely stated that the practical effect of that law-I know what was done to it when it got to the Senate-but the practical effect and practical intent of the bill was that we should have a National quarantine system, because everybody saw how perfectly foolish the other system was. If yellow fever got into the port of Mobile, though it was kept out of the ports of other States, it would cross State lines just the same. Yellow fever does not know anything more about State lines than a passenger train does.

If we would not quibble about the constitutionality of the quarantine law to protect the people from yellow fever, which does not kill a hundred people in twenty years, we ought not to quibble about the constitutionality of a law to stop a practice that kills thousands of people every year, and those people chil-

STATES CAN NOT END THE EVIL.

Mr. President, why is it that the States can not stop this evil? In the first place, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Car-Mack] by his question furnished me the text. If one State passes good laws and enforces them and another State does not, then the business men in the former State are at a business disadvantage with the business men in the latter State.

The business man in the State that has the good laws suffers from the very righteousness of that State's laws, and the business man in the State that has bad laws profits by the very wickedness of that State's laws.

The Senator will agree that it is common sense as well as Americanism that every business man beneath the flag ought to have equal business opportunities so far as the law can give them to him.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. That last remark of the Senator is so broad I am afraid the Senator will revise it when he comes to the question of the protective tariff, and certain industries and certain classes are protected to the detriment—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am coming to that in a minute. Mr. TILLMAN. I think that the good sense and the love of humanity in any State, where it is pointed to properly, will redress this wrong and cure the evil, or kill it, if the facts are ever presented to the people.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But the Senator would not object to having the Nation do it if the Senator believed that it was entirely within the province of the Nation to do it?

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator can convert me on that point, I will be ready to go with him, but I want to call the Senator's very greatly struck by a speech made in the House—
Mr. BACON rose.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will yield to the Senator in a moment.
I ask to print as a part of my remarks a brief, one-minute speech of Representative Daver, of Louisiana, who said he Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly not.

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well. Still if the Senator's bill does not differentiate the kinds of labor and protect us in some way or other, it will be so broad and sweeping that I am afraid it will go too far.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has not read the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not read it. Why should I read it until the time comes to vote on it? I have not had time to

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is very short, I will say to the Sen-

Mr. TILLMAN. But I know the general proposition involved, which is that Congress shall pass a law to prohibit entering into interstate commerce articles produced in factories by children, or something of that sort.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is right. Mr. TILLMAN. That is about the substance of it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That has nothing to do with picking cotton.

Mr. TILLMAN. Picking cotton, however, is an industry in which children engage, and they begin at a very early age, and they begin very early in the morning.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So far as this measure is concerned, it lets them pick cotton. If the Senator had been here when I began my speech he would have heard me say that I have no objection to the working of children in the open air; that I think labor on a farm within their strength is a good thing; that I think one of the best features of our educational system is the manual-training schools of our cities, by far the best schools that we have; that I expect to live to see the day when we shall have as a part of the system of education the teaching of children how to work.

That is not what this bill strikes at. This bill strikes at the personal infamy and the national danger of child's labor in factories and mills and sweatshops, and nothing else.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.
Mr. FULTON. The Senator from South Carolina suggests that the children of South Carolina engage in picking cotton. The Senator from Indiana says he does not purpose by this bill to prohibit the shipment of cotton as an article of interstate commerce. But I ask the Senator if the principle is not exactly the same?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will come to that. I know exactly what the Senator is going to ask. He is going to ask if we can exclude the products of the factory, can we not exclude the products of the factory, can we not exclude the products of the farm? Certainly we can, as a matter of power; but we never will as a matter of policy. The possible abuse of a power is no argument against its existence. I will come to that presently, but I do not want to get away from my questions of fact.

Mr. FULTON. Let me ask the Senator if Congress can prohibit cotton from being shipped from one State to another because it was picked by children—
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; or a redheaded girl.

Mr. FULTON. Can it not prohibit wheat from being shipped from one State to another because a person was employed more

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why, undoubtedly; as a matter of power; though that has nothing to do with this bill. This bill rests on much narrower foundations.

Mr. FULTON. Then there is nothing that Congress can not regulate in our internal affairs.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will answer that question. I am glad the Senator has brought that question up. Let us meet the questions of human industry face to face and vote on them. As long as I am in public life I am prepared to vote on any question that arises, and I never shall shield myself and excuse myself from voting upon them with any strained constitutional construction. Now, I will say to the Senator that I have had in mind-

Mr. FULTON. Let me ask the Senator-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Wait a minute. Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; just a minute. I am on the point the Senator mentions precisely, and I intend when I come to the legal part of it to argue it at length. If the Senator does not mind to wait until I get to that part, I don't want to have my argument disarranged.

Mr. FULTON. It is as to this point—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield further to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator says he never shielded himself behind the Constitution. I assume the Senator does not mean to say that he believes if Congress is without constitutional power to enact certain legislation he will nevertheless insist on voting on it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, most certainly I do not, will say to the Senator; most certainly I do not. Now that the Senator has asked that question, I would not be surprised that a good deal of anxiety about the constitutionality of this bill is wrapped up in that very eight-hour question. It may be that many people hope that this is unconstitutional, so that they will not have to vote on it and the whole group of questions associated with it.

Now I am going to argue the power of this question later on, and I wish the Senator would let me get through with the facts.

Mr. FULTON. Let me say to the Senator in answer that he does not mean it, I am sure, and yet his answer assumes more sincerity to himself than he imputes to others.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the very question the Senator from Wisconsin asked me. Certainly I assume that every man here—no, not every man here; I don't think, no—but I think most of us, have about equal sincerity. I do not think we all I do not think all human people are alike. I know it is a polite thing to say they are all equally sincere, but as a matter of fact we are not. The Senator from Wisconsin asked me if I was any more earnestly interested in this child labor than anybody else and I told him I thought I was.

STATES NEVER HAVE UNIFORM LAWS.

Mr. President, the next reason why the States can not adequately handle this question is because neither in this nor in any other important question have the States ever succeeded in having uniform laws; and it is clear that this evil can not be remedied unless there are uniform laws upon it.

Suppose, for example, that Ohio passes an excellent child-labor law and my State repeals ours, instantly every manufacturing establishment in my State would drain the child labor from Ohio to us, because it is cheaper and more profitable, and the manufacturers of Ohio would be at a disadvantage with the manufacturers of Indiana.

Not only that, but if every single State in the Union but one were to enact a good law and execute it (and I will show you in a minute that they do not and that they can not—and I will show you why they do not and can not), nevertheless the one State that did not and that continued to permit the infamy that exists in many of the States now that I have referred to to-day would be ruining citizens not of that State only, but citizens of the Nation also.

A child that grows up in New York and becomes a citizen is not alone a citizen of New York. He is a citizen of the Republic as well. He does not vote exclusively if he is in North Carolina for North Carolina candidates. He votes for the President of the Republic; he votes for members of the legislature that elect a United States Senator; he votes for a Congressman. He is as much a citizen of the Nation as he is a citizen of the State, and when any system of labor or of lack He is as much a citizen of the Nation as he is a of education ruins him for citizenship in the State he is ruined for citizenship in the Nation.

So not only, Mr. President, is there inequality of business opportunities, but by that inequality the ruin of citizens in any one State, the murder of the innocents in any one Common-wealth, affects the entire Republic as much as it affects that Senators who are sincerely anxious about the question of the rights and the dignity of the States must not also forget the rights and the dignity and the future of the Nation. We have not any right to permit any State to produce in this Republic a degenerate class unfit for citizenship beneath the flag, because they vote at National ballot boxes as well as State ballot boxes, if any exercise of our power under the Constitution can prevent it.

Now, Mr. President, there can not be any uniformity. There not. Here is an abstract of the State laws upon the subject is not. of child labor. There are not six of them alike. Some have no child-labor laws at all; others are worse than any laws, because they are pretenses at labor legislation which make the people and the country think that something has been done, when, as a matter of fact, nothing has been done, and the ruin that went on before without the sanction of the law continues under the sanction of the law.

ABSTRACT OF STATE LAWS.

I am going to read, just to show how inadequate, how inharmonious, these are, a few of these laws:

ALABAMA.

Age limit for working in mines, 12 years. Age limit for working in factories, 12 years; night work in factories, 13 years. Orphans and children of dependent parents between 10 and 12 years are allowed to work in factories. Children under 12 can work sixty-six hours a week. Parents furnish sworn certificate of the age and birth of the child. No factory inspection.

For the purposes of execution that law might just as well not exist. There is no factory inspection even then.

Now, let us go on to some others, because I have not time to read them all:

GEORGIA

Age limit for children in factories, 12 years; orphans and children of dependent parents, 10 years—

Later on in this debate-not to-day-I intend, if any Senator raises the question, to go more extensively into the widow question, or, what is known among the men and women who have studied this question all their lives through, as the "widow-woman fraud," in relation to child labor. It is a shameful and pitiful excuse, under which more children are ground to death than anybody who had not examined the subject would Age limit for children in factories, 12 years; orphans and children of dependent parents, 10 years; age limit for illiterate children, 14 years; for night work, 14 years. After January 1, 1908, children under 18 required to attend school twelve weeks of each year. Certificates furnished by parents. No factory inspection. No age limit for work in mines.

As a matter of practical execution that law might just as well not exist. I have given evidence here in extreme abundance as to how age certificates are obtained in Pennsylvania, where they do have factory inspection. With reference to that, I perhaps had better stop right here and call the attention of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] to what I said a moment ago about the condition which has prevailed since this law went into effect.

CORRECTION OF A MISSTATEMENT.

I read from the Atlanta Journal of January 6, 1907. It corrects my statement a moment ago:

[From Atlanta Journal, January 5, 1907.]

Despite the fact that the child-labor bill became effective in Georgia January 1, it is nevertheless estimated by Ordinary Wilkinson—

I believe that is the county clerk, or some equivalent officer that in Fulton County alone-

I was wrong. It is not in the State, but in Fulton County alonethat in Fulton County alone during the current year between 2,000 and 3,000 children under 12 years of age may be put to work in the factories. That is "isolated"—that is, "occasional." It could not be that our "best people" would ever work that many children after the passage of the new law.

This seeming infraction of the spirit of the new law becomes possible in this manner:
Though a child may be under the prescribed age, if he is an orphan or has a widowed mother or a disabled father, and any one of these conditions be shown to the ordinary under the oath of child or parent, a certificate will be issued by the ordinary permitting the child to work in a factory.

I said to the Senator from Georgia that the law of his State is not worth the paper it is written on; it is just what the factory people want; and it permits this infamy to go on under the sanction of law, whereas it had to go on heretofore without the approval of the statute. Now, let us see. I am reading from one of that State's papers—the Atlanta Journal:

one of that State's papers—the Atlanta Journal:

In every case the evidence must be written out in detail and filed for inspection by the grand jury. This method, of course, throws a safeguard about the bill; but, as has been pointed by mill owners, the absence of any birth record in Fulton County makes fraud under such instances highly and frequently possible.

Of prime interest to the ordinary's office just at present is the immense increase of work that the operation of the new bill has entailed. The registration and examination of each candidate for one of the permits mentioned requires, says the ordinary, at least an hour's time. Nor does the bill provide extra pay or assistance for this additional work.

All they have got to do is to show not are alone but that only

All they have got to do is to show, not age alone, but that only one of three conditions exist; and to show that in any way—by a certificate; and there is no factory inspection. The law is a dead letter; and the ordinary of Fulton County estimates that in the present year and in that one county 3,000 children will be put to work, notwithstanding your new law.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. BACON. I simply rise to say that the Senator in his statement of this law is not entirely correct, and while I will not interrupt him to discuss that proposition I will, after he concludes, as he will not permit me to read the law now—Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can not do it, because time is flying.

Mr. BACON. I want to say that at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks I myself, in my own time, intend to put the Georgia law in the RECORD and let the public judge whether the Senator is correct or is mistaken.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will; but, as one of the Senator's best friends, I hope the Senator will not defend that law or attempt to deny the condition existing in his own State, because if the Senator does I will tell the Senator that I do not think he is familiar with conditions in his own State.

Mr. BACON. I am very much obliged to the Senator for his repeated estimate of my various faculties as to information, etc.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I could not help it when the Senator said it was "occasional and isolated." I did not say it. The Senator from Georgia said it.

NEW JERSEY.

Age limit for children working in factories and mines, 14 years. Hours of labor, fifty-five per week, and night work forbidden except in canning establishments and glassware. Factory inspection.

Age limit for children working in factories, 12 years. Children under 18 not required to work more than sixty-six hours per week—eleven hours per day. Written statement of age of child furnished by parents. No provision for children working in mines. No factory inspection.

Yet the Senator from North Carolina states that they have an admirable child-labor law down there—that is, in North Carolina-and I have the official notes of the stenographer reporting the speeches those North Carolina mill owners made in their successful resistance to any improvement in the law at the last session of the North Carolina legislature.

Oregon has one of the very best laws in the country and South Carolina has one of the worst. I guess there is only one worse than that, and that is the law of West Virginia, which is the worst in the whole country.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Age limit for children working in mines and factories, 12 years. Orphans and children of dependent parents allowed to work at any age in textile factories. Night work forbidden for children under 12 years of age. Hours of labor, sixty-six hours per week. Parents required to furnish certificates of age. No factory inspection.

MEST VIRGINIA.

Age limit for children in mines and factories, 12 years. No factory inspection.

That is all for West Virginia, where captains of industry

Wisconsin undoubtedly has the best law of any of them. But to read an abstract of them all takes too much time; so I ask leave to insert an abstract of these laws in my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Permission will be granted, in the absence of objection.

The abstract referred to is as follows:

How about Indiana? Mr. OVERMAN.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Indiana law is about the third or fourth best in the country. It is an admirable law. The age limit there for children working in factories and mines is 14 years, and the law provides for factory inspection. We have a good factory inspection, but not as good as that in Illinois, which is admirable, notwithstanding which I propose to show the law is violated there just now, as I have no doubt it is in my State, although none of the investigators have pointed it out in my State. Still we violate the law I have no doubt, for States can not properly deal with this National evil. Manufacturers of a State having a good law will violate it because of the competition of States having bad laws. Uniformity is the only remedy.

Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. President, will the Senator permit me for just a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do. Mr. GALLINGER. I have here Bulletin 68, of the Department of Commerce and Labor, on child labor, which shows that in Evansville, Ind., 12.5 per cent of the breadwinners are between 10 and 15 years of age, and in Indianapolis 9.9 per cent of the breadwinners are of that early age. So that in Indiana the law is being violated.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I said it was, I stated that to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I so understood the Senator.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I say we have in Indiana an excellent child-labor law and an excellent inspection law; but it is violated there, though not to the extent to which it is being violated elsewhere. But to the extent to which it is being violated. we have just that large percentage of infamy.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator on that point that in eighty cities of the country, having at least 50,000 inhabitants each, the per cent is 10.3 and in Indiana it is 11.2.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But take the cities as a whole, Mr. GALLINGER. Those are the only cities reported in Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say, notwithstanding the excellent factory inspection, I am going to show that in Illinois, whose law comes as nearly as possible to being perfect, it is violated. The truth about it is that the States are incompetent to deal with this question. You have got to have a uniform law.

You have got to have the manufacturer feel that at any time, upon the application of any citizen, of any good woman who upon the application of any citizen, of any good woman who sees him take a child to work whom she knows to be under age, to apply to a court of justice, have him haled by the United States district attorney before the United States district court, and let him face the prison bars. That will increase the manufacturer's watchfulness.

If you depend upon the parents to furnish certificates and let the manufacturers obtain the labor of these children, of course you can not get laws enforced; but when the manufacturer him-self knows that he must err, if he errs at all, upon the right side, and that if he errs upon the wrong side, he will find the penitentiary opening to him as the consequence, he will take mighty good care that he does know the age of the children whom he employs.

WHY STATES DO NOT PASS OR ENFORCE GOOD LAWS.

Mr. President, another reason why it is that the States can not care for this matter is that in those States where this evil is worst-and I will not now name them-the great interests that are becoming rich from this practice have always in the past been powerful enough to prevent righteous legislation; and in no instance, as I shall show by extracts I will put in the Record, have they failed to take advantage of that. Time after time they have defeated such legislation in Pennsylvania and in every one of the Southern States, as the Senator from South Carolina pointed out a moment ago, and even when the pressure of public opinion becomes such that a law is passed, as is the case with the North Carolina law now, it is constantly violated, as I shall show by sworn testimony that I propose to give in a moment.
Mr. OVERMAN.

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do. Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator says that in the State of Wisconsin they have the best child-labor law in AmericaMr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. And that they also have an excellent childlabor law in Illinois-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They have.

Mr. OVERMAN. And yet those laws are constantly violated?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then, can Congress pass a law that will not be violated?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think we can make a law, if you will vote for it-but will you?-that will not be violated more than four or five times. When you put behind the bars a man who has wrung his money out of the blood of children, the remainder of such men will quit doing it. They are looking out for their own pocketbooks and their own persons.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do. Mr. SPOONER. The Senator's last observation leads me, with his permission, to ask him a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I yield. Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think Congress has the power to enact a child-labor law, the violation of which in Wisconsin would be visited with imprisonment?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Undoubtedly, if they ship the goods made by those children on an interstate railway.

Mr. SPOONER. No; the Senator does not answer my question.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I will answer that most certainly I think so.

Mr. SPOONER. That answers my question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I answer your question, and I will go on and answer it some more. I will say to the Senator Congress can, in my judgment, pass such a law as I was trying to explain a moment ago. This proposed law is so drawn that every sincere States-rights man can vote for it without violating his constitutional convictions. I drew it in that way. Otherwise I would have drawn it upon the theory of the meat-inspection law. If we had a right to put inspectors into a packing house to inspect a packing house and to see that they did not can and prepare diseased meat, I know of no reason why we could not do the same thing with manufacturing establishments.

I decline to debate that point now, because that is not up; but what I do say to the Senator is this: I would not pretend for a moment that we have the right to make a law for a State that would affect the child labor in that State exclusively,

That, however, is not the question before us.

We have a right to pass a law applying to any factory or mine owner in Wisconsin who ships his products out of the State. I will demonstrate that to your satisfaction later, because I have studied the question, and when I come to the legal part of my argument I will show that we have control over the shipment of products of child labor over interstate railways.

Mr. SPOONER. We have all examined this subject more or less in connection with questions which have arisen here. I only want to get at the Senator's proposition.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not on that proposition yet, but I will deal with it presently. I am not on that proposition now.

Mr. SPOONER. But I am on the proposition now. The Senator's proposition, as I understand it, is that Congress has the power to enact, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, a law which will be operative to regulate adequately-or not at all—child labor in the States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In factories, mines, and sweatshops in the States

Mr. SPOONER. Child labor in the States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; child labor in the States.

Mr. SPOONER. Engaged in the manufacture of a product for transportation from State to State?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; even agriculture. Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me a word further, that statement is based upon the proposition that the power of Congress over interstate commerce is absolute; that it may prohibit the transportation of any product from State to State.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; that is precisely the proposition that I intend to argue, and I will present to the Senator some decisions upon it. Of course I suppose that this ought not to be done. We have an instrumentality which is supposed to instruct us upon this subject, and we ourselves ought not to debate the constitutionality of it until we hear from that be done. tribunal.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the Senator refers to the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I prefer to debate that question when it comes up.

Mr. SPOONER. It will come up.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not suppose it will: I do not know whether it will come up or not, unless the Senator can give out a fiat here.

Mr. SPOONER. I can give a fiat for myself, at least.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, you did give a fiat to the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You presented a resolution referring the

Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To the Judiciary Committee, which, of course, would make the Senator chairman of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee which was to advise the Senate upon the constitutionality of the question. Of course that assumed that the committee having the bill in charge—the Committee on Education and Labor-was not competent to pass upon the matter, and that the other Senators here were not competent to pass upon it.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, I think that is a subject that will bear some discussion when the thing comes up.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I have been a member of the Senate a good many years longer than the Senator from Indiana has been-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; that is true.

Mr. SPOONER. Although I do not expect, if I should remain here very much longer, to know as much as the Senator does. But it has often happened during my relatively short experience that the Senate has called upon the Judiciary Committee to advise it as to what it might, so far as that committee's opinion went, within constitutional limits, do in the way of legislation. The Senator is quite mistaken when he speaks of me as having issued any flat. Several bills were pending here on this subject, about which I had then and have now doubt-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You have more than that.

Mr. SPOONER. And to which, perhaps, on reconsideration, the Senator might not give his approbation. I said I had doubt.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thought I had understood the Senator heretofore to express more than that.

Mr. SPOONER. No, Mr. President; I do not know what the Senator thought he understood, but I know what I thought and what the condition of my mind was. I did not consider it any usurpation. I conceived it to be a legitimate function to introduce a resolution in the Senate to instruct the Judiciary Committee to report its opinion upon a question. The flat lay in the adoption by the Senate of the resolution placing the matter before the committee; but I do not intend to express my opinion about it in the Senator's speech.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will. I have already, while the Senator was out, invited any Senator here who wanted to at any time to ask me any question, either about the facts or the law, so that if I were wrong I might be corrected.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course I shall ask for information of the Senator, because I am on the Judiciary Committee, and I want the advice of the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say to the Senator that I am permitting him to interrupt me, but I do not understand why the Senator should throw out that last suggestion. Of course I can not give the Senator any information, nor can anybody else.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; the Senator can.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, I might; but the Senator does not SPOONER. If I did not think the Senator could, I would not ask him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I decline to take any time at this juncture to discuss the practice which is growing up here of a Junior Supreme Court to relieve the Supreme Court itself of all its constitutional functions and the Senate of all its constitu-tional responsibilities. I will not take any time for that now, but I shall be glad to debate that when it comes up, both as to the fact and as to the propriety and policy of it. For myself, I think it is extremely dangerous. I do not think, even with the limitations which the Senator was so kind as to suggest, that I will have very much difficulty in showing the danger in that practice.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no doubt that the Senator can do so.
Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana

yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I desire to get to the legal part of my argument, but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator in speaking of the difficulty in enforcing the State laws said that often, where perfect laws were enacted, mill owners would prevent the perfect and effective administration of the law. In other words, if I understand the Senator, his argument is based very largely upon the presumption that local self-government is a failure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. By no manner of means. I am surprised that the Senator from Tennessee, for whom I have an affection as great as is my admiration—and he knows it, too-should deal with this serious question in that light vein.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, Senators on this side of the Chamber are unable to hear the debate.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President— Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator knows perfectly well that I am as earnest a defender of local self-government within its proper limits as is the Senator, and that I do not believe for a single minute that the failure of the State laws to grapple with a situation like this means the failure of local self-government.

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator will permit me—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I yield.
Mr. CARMACK. I was stating what I conceive to be the logical conclusion of the Senator's argument. The Senator was giving reasons why the State laws would not accomplish the object, and one of the reasons given by him was that even where State laws, perfect in themselves, were enacted, the corrupt in-fluence of mill owners was such that the laws could not be en-I say the logical conclusion of that is that the Senator bases his position very largely upon the assumption that local self-government is a failure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the way it may look to the Senator from Tennessee.

PAILURE TO ENFORCE STATE LAWS.

Mr. President, I will ask the Senate to permit me to present affidavits from a large number of persons concerning law violations in a number of these States, particularly in the southern cotton mills and the coal breakers of Pennsylvania.

Here is Mr. Lovejoy's report of one of his investigations. His affidavit to its truth is already in the record. I want to call attention to one from New Jersey. These are all specific. They give names; they give ages; they give places, and draw the necessary conclusions. Here is the case of a girl who works the necessary conclusions. in New Jersey from twelve to fourteen hours a day.

15 years of age and had been taken out of school at 12. She was

Mr. Lovejoy proceeds now to give examples, giving names and dates and places: Willie Mudamovitch-

That is a foreign name, you see. All of the names that I am going to give now for the next few minutes are foreign names; but because these are the children of foreigners is that any reason why they should be ruined for citizenship?

A little later, if it strikes any Senator here that because they are "foreigners"—Huns or Slavs—therefore the matter is minimized, I shall, by the time Senators on the other side get through with their lunch, make even worse citations from that portion of the country where is found, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] the other day most truthfully said, the purest strain of Anglo-Saxon blood to be found on the continent.

I shall show by sworn testimony that those children are being ruined for citizenship, pure American strain though they be, as surely as are the foreign children in the breakers of Penn-

Mr. Lovejoy goes on. This is from his article in the Woman's Home Companion, to the truth of which he makes affidavit:

Willie Mudamovitch, of Shenandoah. He is but 10 years old and has been working in the breaker at odd times during the past year.

So he began work at 9 years of age.

He weighs 63 pounds, and was found hungry and dressed in rags at the Lehigh Valley station during the suspension of mining in May.

Walter Wilcowsky-

A foreigner-

Walter Wilcowsky, of Girardville-

Then he goes on to describe the town; but there is no use of my taking your valuable time for that-

Walter was 13 years old the 9th of last December and began to pick slate in one of the large collieries on the estate five weeks before he was 13 years old. He earns 77 cents a day for nine hours of work.

Among the scores of boys met and questioned in this valley of the region the following were typical and will convey an idea of the ages, wages, and educational attainments of the boys who are under the legal age, and also the practical utility of the work certificate: Frank Brizelle was 13 the 9th of July—

Therefore he began work at 12-

Frank Brizelle was 13 the 9th of July, and has been working for a year, having entered the breaker three months before he was 13. Although he is smaller than his age would indicate, he has never had an age certificate and affirms that he has never been asked for one.

So that violation of the law can not be put off on the guilty parents—and the parents are guilty. But under this bill the manufacturer will have to assure himself about the age. He can not excuse himself for his laches by a false certificate from the parents.

Mr. Lovejoy continues:

Mr. Lovejoy continues:

Micheal Nicuola has been employed four months and earns $4.93 a week. He claims to have reached 14 years the 6th of May, but several of his companions positively assert that on his recent birthday he told them he was 12.

John Barrows, who works in the same breaker, will be 14 next December. He is working on the "jigs" at present and earns $1 a day. He has been steadily employed since he was 8 years of age.

Andrew Komovosky, who was 13 years old April 28, left school in the first grade to enter the breaker. He is absolutely illiterate.

Charley Carpenter has been working two years, although he is but 12 years old at present. His wages are 72 cents a day.

This is in the State where the law requires that they shall be

This is in the State where the law requires that they shall be 14 at the very least, and 16 in the mines.

Michael Lutousky has also been working two years, although but 12 years old the 17th of August. He earns 66 cents for a nine-hour day and can not read his own name.

John McLaughlin * * * was 14 last January and has been in the breaker five years. His wages are 65 cents for eight hours' work. He says he has had three certificates from the squire, but none from the

Mr. President, the rest of this article is filled with similar illustrations. The few that I have read give you a fair descrip-

Here is another case of a little girl, "Mary Jaeger, 3 years of age, assisting her mother. She does this eight or ten hours a day," etc.

Mr. KEAN. Where was that? Mr. BEVERIDGE. That was in Paterson, N. J. Mr. President, if the law could not be enforced against people in as humble circumstances as those, can we think it would be enforced as against the great glass mills that have great walls about them?

The affidavits which I shall publish in my remarks, with the permission of the Senate, absolutely demonstrate the violation of this law. Here is one that I will stop long enough to read: UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Columbia:

United States of America, District of Columbia:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public, F. C. Roberts, who on oath says that in March, 1906, he was in High Point, N. C., representing the American Federation of Labor; that he saw there the children employed in a knee-pants factory in operation in that town; that many of them were from 10 to 12 years of age, to all appearances, and that one little girl, named Carrie Morgan, whose father was employed in one of the furniture factories of that place, was about 8 years of age, according to a statement made to him by her father; that her father furnished him with the weekly pay envelopes, showing the wages paid Carrie Morgan for the three months preceding, and that these envelopes showed that the child was paid from 19 to 49 cents per week.

And, Mr. President, here [exhibiting] are the original pay envelopes for Carrie Morgan, 8 years of age, working ten and twelve hours a day.

"SHIPMENTS" OF CHILDREN.

There is particularly one affidavit to which I want to again call the Senate's attention, of the observation personally on a train by Mr. McKelway of a load of children being taken from Tennessee, they having been gotten by an agent from some of the other cotton mills and shipped to other portions of the South. I should like very much to have the Senate hear it.

South. I should like very much to have the Senate hear it.

United States of America, District of Columbia, ss:

Personally appeared before me this day A. J. McKelway, who on oath says that in December, 1905, he was on board a train going from Knoxville, Tenn., to Spartanburg, S. C.; that he saw on board the train an immigrant agent of an immigration association of South Carolina, who was in charge of a company of about fifty people bound for the cotton mills of South Carolina, whom the agent had induced to leave their homes in western Tennessee; that the agent told him that he had made seven "shipments" of these people for the cotton mills from Newport, Tenn., averaging fifteen to the "shipment;" that seven more "shipments" had gone from Cleveland, Tenn.; that there were several agents at work besides himself, and that he had shipped personally about 500 people, to the cotton mills; that he, A. J. McKelway, talked with some of the children in the company; that Harrison Swan said that he was "going on" 16 years of age and was going to work in the Four Mills, at Greenville, S. C.; that Charley Matthews and a little fellow with him of the same size said that they were about 9 years of age and were going to work in the mills; that the agent told him that there were a plenty of children 6 and 8 and 19 years of age in the South Carolina mills, because their parents lied about their ages; that in the summer of 1905 the Rev. Mr. Abernethy, a Methodist minister living at Clyde, in western North Carolina, told him, A. J. McKelway, that 1,500 people had taken the train at Clyde for the South Carolina cotton mills during the preceding year.

A. J. McKelway, 1907 A. J. MCKELWAY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 22d day of January, 1907.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana to print certain affidavits in the RECORD without reading? The Chair hears none, and permission is granted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If Senators are not convinced about the testimony already given that wherever even the laws exist they are not enforced, I ask them to consider the following overwhelming proof. I ask to submit the following affidavits without reading.

I repeat that if evidence above given as to the violation of the law in States that have laws does not convince the Senate, I herewith submit, which I ask to be printed in my remarks, affidavits from reputable men and women who have in person witnessed what they swear to in the various States named in the affidavits. I hope no Senator will feel that because the law is not enforced in his particular State he is called upon to make an oration in defense of his State, because State laws do not appear to be enforced anywhere.

S. Gertrude Knight, of New York City, makes the following affidavit:

State of New York, County of New York:

S. Gertrude Knight, of said city and county, being duly sworn, deposes and says that the children recorded in the appended pages were seen by her working in their respective homes in the manner indicated in the course of her investigation made during November and December, 1906, their ages, hours of work, and pay as set down herewith being in accordance with the statements made by the said children or by members of their families.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 2d day of January, 1907.

If the law could be violated in this instance, how much more certain is it violated in the great factories having vast influence, surrounded by walls carefully guarded, and whose owners have great control and social influence?

CASES OF CHILD LABOR IN NEW JERSEY.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., January 4, 1907.

1. On the 27th day of December, 1906, I saw Greta Shult, 15 years of age, cutting out embroidered collars. She has been doing this work for the last four years. Her mother takes this work home from an embroidery factory, and the two work together twelve hours a day in a tumble-down tenement house, cutting out the edges of the embroidery. This work is a serious strain on the health of the girl, and her general health is not nearly so good as it was formerly, according to the testimony of her mother.

2. On the 20th day of November, 1906, I saw Concetta Montignaro, 8 years of age, assisting her mother in making artificial flowers. She has been doing this for the last two years. She winds the stems of the violets and gets them ready for her mother to finish. She works usually ten hours a day. The close confinement has proven injurious to her health.

3. On the 26th day of December, 1906, I saw Nettie Schroeder, A years of age, making timenous to the stems of age, making timenous the stems of the stems of age, making timenous the stems of the stems of the stems of age, making timenous the stems of the

3. On the 26th day of December, 1906, I saw Nettle Schroeder, 4 years of age, making kimonos on a sewing machine. Her mother is a contractor who deals in kimonas, and the child assists her in making the goods. For the last six months she has been able to sew all the long seams, sitting over the machine sometimes eight hours a day. (Testimony of mother as to number of hours and child's age.)

4. November 21, 1906, I visited the home of Mrs. Kane, on the first floor of a five-story tenement in Hoboken. Mrs. Kane makes the tassels for dance orders, preparing the silk in a twisted roll, and tying the pencils. Her four children—Harry, aged 4; Nellie, aged 6; Ethel, aged 8 and John, aged 10—work at untangling the silk and getting it ready for her to use. The youngest child works about nine hours a day at this, and the others spend their time when out of school helping their mother in her work. The hours when they work and the ages of the children here stated are given on the testimony of the mother and of Mrs. Itschner, a neighbor living in the same house.

5. October 24, 1906, I saw Madeline Frank, 15 years of age, making passamenterie. She has hip disease and was taken out of school at the age of 12, having been able up to that time to do very little studying. Her parents felt unable to support her without her contributing something toward her own support; and as she is incapacitated for working in a factory, for the last three years she has had to do this work at home. She receives the braid, stitches it according to the required design on a cardboard, presses it, stitches it into shape, removes it from the board, and winds it in rolls. This she does from twelve to fourteen hours a day. When I saw her she was pressing the work with heavy from manifestly beyond her strength to lift and handle. Obviously the long hours of work and the nature of the work make it unfit for any child to attempt—much less a child physically disabled. Facts as to age and as to hours of work given on the testimony of Madeline and of her mother, Mrs. John Frank.

6. November 9, 1906, I saw Mary X. Jaeger, 3 years of age, assisting her mother, Mrs. William Jaeger, in Again, I remark, if the law is violated in as humble cases as those given above, where the people are without influence and where the inspectors can easily find them, how much more certain do we know that it is violated in those mighty industries whose works are carefully protected from intrusion; whose owners have widespread political, social, and financial influence; who are known to have practiced child labor in the past, and whose financial interest it is to practice child labor now. Here is an affidavit as to facts ascertained by a lady whose word no man or woman in her State can question, even if she did not make an affidavit, as she does, to what she saw, and this is in the State of Illinois, which has one of the very best laws in the Union and an admirable inspection. I present the affidavit of Harriet M. Van Der Vaart:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, County of Cook, ss:

affidavit of Harriet M. Van Der Vaart:

State of Illinois, County of Cook, ss:

In the winter of 1905, for the National Child Labor Committee, I visited a number of glass factories in Indiana and Illinois. In glass factories workers alternate between day and night work. The day shift of one or two weeks will be the night shift of the following one or two weeks. Boys generally prefer night work. They can cut short the sleeping time in the day and have several bours for play. The night shift is dismissed generally at 3.30 in the morning. Coming from the intense heat around the furnaces into the cool morning air makes the workers liable to colds and pulmonary troubles. The gas, the changes in temperature, and violent exercise, such as the constant rapid walking between the furnaces and the annealing ovens, are debilitating and tend to retard growth and development. Boys who work in glass factories as a rule are shorter, weigh less, and in every way are not as well developed as boys living a more normal life.

The boy's work in a glass factory does not require any training or skill. The apprenticeship to the glass blowers is very long—five years—and very few boys ever become apprentices. As boys are at a premium in the glass industry, they can work a day, half a day, a night, or half the night, and it is optional with the boy whether he returns or not. In some factories it is customary to give them extra pay if they will stay the entire week and do good work. Numbers of idle boys loaf around many of the factories, work some, carry beer very often, and, as a business man told me who has a store near the inrace glass factory in Streator, some gamble and use language that makes the vicinity avoided.

In Indiana I found it customary for the school children to go into the factory at 6 in the evening and work until between 11 and 12, especially Thursday and Friday nights, and to work all day Saturday. I found children of 11 and 12 working at night in both States. Saloons abound in the vicinity of glass factories. In some Illinois.

I was told that the factory had been inspected the week before, and the proprietors fined for violating the law. From my experience I should say that glass manufacturers are not obeying the child-labor laws we now have and are teaching children to disregard the law. The excuse given is because of the competition in the different States. Those with whom I have talked say there would not be any objection to stringent laws if the same laws applied to all factories in the United States.

Here is another, from Elizabeth B. Butler, of New Jersey:

JANUARY 4, 1907.

December 27, 1906, I visited Mrs. Breidenkopf, in West Hoboken, N. J. She is an artificial flower maker, and her chief assistant for the last two years was her daughter Felicie, who died two months ago, at the age of 5 years. The child was as skillful a flower maker as her mother, and her mother states that in twisting the stems of violets and of small roses the child was the quicker of the two. She also, at the times of year when the flower work was slack, cut the yard embroidery, cutting sometimes 50 yards an hour. She worked from 6 o'clock in the morning until 11 at night daily. Her mother states that she had no disease, and died suddenly from no assignable cause.

mills. That four of these children claimed to have helped mothers or sister in the mills. That the principal of the school declared that it was a matter of constant complaint that the children, often those under 12, which is the legal age in North Carolina, left the school to work in the mills. That the school enrollment was only about one-half of the school census of the district, taken the previous year, and that the school attendance was much below the enrollment, largely because of this competition between the school and the mill.

Personally appeared before me, a notary public, A. J. McKeiway, who on oath says that in the summer of 1906 he visited a family employed then at the Whittier mills, near Atlanta, Ga. That he saw the mother, who had been left a widow while employed by the Milstead Manufacturing Company the year before, and that she had declared that she had taken her children as follows to work with her in the mill: Pearl, aged 16; Jeffle, 14; Clifford, 9; Loy, 7; leaving Louis, a child of 4 in charge of a baby, Aline, aged 2. That the management of the Milstead Manufacturing Company, Clifford West, then aged 9 years, was playing yiean, except that the name of Loy, aged 7, did not appear on the pay roll and that he only helped his mother. That according to the testimony of both Mrs. West and the management of the Milstead Manufacturing Company, Clifford West, then aged 9 years, was playing about an elevator and was quite badly hurt by a weight striking his head and then by being pinned to the floor by the opening of the elevator doors. That according to Mrs. West's statement she moved with these children from the Milstead Manufacturing Company to the Whittier mills in order to get the higher wages paid for night work. That at the time of this interview with Mrs. West, Clifford West, then aged 11, was working in the Whittier mills at night, the rest of the family having changed to day work. That the hours of labor in Georgia for operatives of all ages is sixty-six hours a neck, which, by reason of the half holiday on Saturday amounts to twelve hours a day or twelve hours a night for the first five working days of the week.

RESISTANCE TO ENACTMENT OF STATE LEGISLATION.

Not only is there universal nonenforcement of law, but there has been and still is resistance to good legislation. It is notorious that wherever friends of this reform have attempted to secure legislation the interests which were profiting by the evil resisted their efforts or else defeated or impaired such laws as were passed. For example, Mr. Durland, from whom I have already extensively quoted, tells the following action of the glass manufacturers in Pennsylvania in Outlook, volume 74, on page 125:

RESISTANCE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

RESISTANCE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Yet the indifference of legislators or the lack of public pressure has resulted in a continuance of the system, with never a strong hand raised in protest. As soon as the Western Association of Glass Manufacturers saw that a bill had been introduced to abolish night work, a committee was appointed to go to Harrisburg and prevent the enactment of any legislation this session. These manufacturers are reported to have adopted resolutions denouncing and ridiculing that section of the bill which provided that children must learn to read and write English before beginning to work. It was the influence of this organization that helped to keep in office as chief factory inspector for several years Mr. James Campbell, Mr. Campbel it was who had been an advocate of the glass manufacturers at all hearings on the glass tariff before the Committee on Ways and Means at Washington. Mr. Campbell it was who, in speaking in Pittsburg last October, before the Mothers' Congress, said that Pennsylvania suffers from the excessive education of workingmen's children. This is the theory that some of Mr. Campbell's subordinates have been fond of upholding of late. As recently as March, at a meeting of the Civic Club in Philadelphia, a late factory inspector urged the same point. But Mr. Campbell has been removed by Governor Pennypacker, and his successor promises a more enlightened policy. These are the kind of men who do not even pretend to enforce existing laws. As Judge Gray further remarks, "Some of the laws in the anthracite region are little better than dead letters." Endless excuses are advanced for this laxity, but there is little validity in any of them.

Mrs. Kelley tells of resistance to the passage of legislation in Through Legislation." On pages 53 and 54 she says:

EESISTANCE IN ILLINOIS.

Although the manufacture of glass is one of the industries most highly protected by the tariff for many years past and although the wages of glass blowers are protected by a most influential and all-embracing union, yet employers and glass blowers have in at least two States worked together to keep the children from receiving any adequate legislative protection. In Illinois for ten years the glass manufacturers were successful in their unwearying efforts to prevent the enactment of a provision restricting night work to persons over the age of 16 years. And even when the present enlightened measure was finally passed, in 1903, this was done against the protest of the manufacturers and of a glass-bottle blower who appeared before the senate committee at Springfield in opposition to the bill. In New Jersey, in 1904, there was the same condict, the glass-bottle blowers' union, as such, urging the passage of a law prohibiting night work for children and the glass manufacturers nevertheless securing for the opposition the support of a State senator at Trenton who had once been a blower and who succeeded in getting stricken out of the bill this most valuable of its provisions, despite the united efforts of the labor organizations of the whole, State and of the Children's Protective Alliance, comprising forty societies for the protection and welfare of children.

In Pennsylvania, in March, 1903, the Western Pennsylvania Association of Glass Manufacturers voted at a public meeting held in Pittsburg to keep a committee at Harrisburg throughout the session of the legislature to prevent the enactment of a measure prohibiting night work for children and all employment of illiterate children. So successful was this committee that the friends of the bill were not even granted a hearing before the senate committee to which the bill was referred. In all these cases the arguments used were identical. Poverty must not be intensified by prohibiting the em

RESISTANCE IN ALABAMA.

cerning resistance to legislation:

RESISTANCE IN ALABAMA.

The strongest objection to preventive legislation is, of course, the desire for cheap labor. To the shame of the northern capitalist be it said, he has carefully fostered this superstition in order to obtain the cheap and submissive labor that he believes children give. In 1887 a law was passed in Alabama limiting the hours of children's work in factories to eight a day.

At the instigation of Massachusetts mill owners this law was repealed in December, 1894, on their promise that these mill owners would establish a factory in Alabama. To-day the mills thus established are working at least fifty children under 12 years old for eleven and three-quarters hours a day. It is difficult to see the exact benefit to Alabama, since all the capital in the Alabama City mills is northern and eastern and the dividends go out of the State.

The village is a beautiful one, managed with much moral and sanitary severity, but no seeming philanthroples, such as natatoriums, churches, the libraries (for people who can not even read), can atone for this deliberate demoralization of the southern conscience and injury to the future of her industries by those who in their own State are forbidden to work children by the best factory laws in the world. In Massachusetts no child may go into the mills under 14, and only then after having attended school for at least a year.

This is not an isolated instance. Much of the opposition to the passage of a protective law to the southern legislatures is made by the representatives of northern corporations, who are taking full advantage of the possibility of child labor. In eleven mills I visited owned by northern capital there were twice as many children under 12 as in thirteen owned by southern capital.

The total number of children under 12 in the mills of Alabama (including the unpaid "helpers") I computed to be about 1,200. This number is not stationary or diminishing; on the contrary, it is steadily increasing, and the experience of the other Southern States proves that it must be so. In one of the olders mills they told me that the children were younger and more numerous than they had ever had them before.

Again she says on page 1294:

Again she says on page 1294:

In Augusta, Ga., a count was made in June, 1900, through 8 mills, and 556 children under 12 were found working. In South Carolina Mr. John B. Cleveland, president of the Whitney mills, giving evidence before the legislature, stated that 30 per cent of the operatives in the Whitney mills were under 12, and Mr. James L. Orr, president of the Piedmont mills, South Carolina, that 25 per cent of his machinery was run by such children. The statement sometimes made, that the number of children affected is so small that it is not worth public attention, is not borne out by these figures, nor by the fact that in Georgia as many as 30 mill presidents appeared before the legislature to defeat the child-labor bill there.

Again, on page 1295, she says:

Again, on page 1295, she says:

Northern and southern capitalists should be warned by their work people in the North and their fellow-citizens to withdraw their opposition to the passage of such a law.

The opposition at present is immense. When I returned from my tour of investigation in Alabama I found the whole community, except those directly interested financially in cotton mills, on my side. The press, the pulpit, the schools, the women in their various clubs took the matter up. A bill was presented at the second session of the Alabama legislature, in the upper and lower houses, by gentlemen who had no connection with the labor movement.

The mill owners immediately engaged two able lawyers, who were also professional lobbyists, to deal with the members of the legislature on the subject. Representatives were warned that the local bills they had been sent up to pass would have small prospect of success should they vote for a child-labor law.

At a hearing before the joint committees of the house and senate the senate chamber was packed to overflowing. The mill owners' interests were represented by a lawyer who was also the president of a cotton mill, the owners of which are "philanthropic" northern people—a corporation clergyman and a railway attorney.

None of these men ever touched on the pros and cons of child labor. The sincerity of their arguments may be gauged by their bringing forward a miserable little petition against the bill, written on the official paper of a very small mill, and signed by seventeen of its operatives.

The hearing was simply a public bluff. It appears that the rejection

The hearing was simply a public bluff. It appears that the rejection of the bill had been settled before in spite of public excitement upon the question. Similar defeats were recently experienced in Georgia and South Carolina, where the educated women have been making gallant efforts to get the need for child-labor legislation recognized.

THE FIGHT IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Here is what Doctor Roberts says in Outlook, volume 78, September-December, 1904, pages 982-984:

September-December, 1904, pages 982-984:

No child under 13 years of age can, according to law, be regularly employed, but in every industrial center where children are to any extent employed the consensus of opinion among labor leaders and professional men is that the law is evaded. A labor leader in Lancaster said: "I'll swear by a stack of Bibles as high as the Lutheran Church that there are scores of children under 13 years of age in these factories." In Allentown child labor is at a premium, while men walk the streets unable to get work. A slik manufacturer of this city said: "All slik-throwing plants ought to get out of Allentown, for child labor is too scarce." In Reading a hosiery manufacturer said: "We can not get all the boys and girls we need in our factories." Employers when asked, "Do parents try to secure employment to children under age?" invariably answered, "Yes." Superintendents of public schools in centers of textile industries are uniform in their testimony that a certain percentage of parents take their children from school when they are only 10, 11, or 12 years of age and send them to the factory or mill. Physicians who practice among employees in mills and factories are unanimous in their testimony that children are employed before they are 13 years of age. Lawyer Craig, of Lebanon, said: "Stop ignorant and greedy parents from committing perjury when they take out certificates of employment to their children." Doctor Davies, of Lancaster, said: "Execute the laws now in force before you attempt to pass others."

Is this expression of public sentiment justified? In every industrial center there are humane and patriotic employers, but they must com-tificates of employment to their children." Doctor Davies, of Lancaster, said: "Execute the laws now in force before you attempt to pass others."

Is this expression of public sentiment justified? In every industrial center there are humane and patriotic employers, but they must compete with sinister and heartless men who regard all consideration for tender children seeking employment as "sentiment," which has no place in business relations. In every large city there are factories of ill repute, wherein conditions are wretched, wages low, and the moral atmosphere degrading. I visited one of these where 600 employees labored, 65 per cent of whom were under 16 years of age. Six months ago a strike had occurred in this factory. I asked a boy 17 years old if they had won it. His reply was, "No; the kids defeated us." Among these employees it would be easy to select a score or two of boys and girls under 13 years. The deputy factory inspector has sent home as many as thirty employees from this mill in one day, but within a week most of them were back again. The two wards from which the employer draws his labor supply are the most congested in the city, and one of them is being rapidly filled by an influx of Slavs and Italians. A public school superintendent, who has taught in these two wards for fifteen years, said: "It is an impossibility to stop the exodus of boys and girls to the mills before they are 13 years of age." He had conducted night schools for many years in these wards, and 50 per cent of the boys attending them were doing primary work. In the town of Freeland I met three sisters coming home from the silk mill; each of them began work when she was 12 years of age. The superintendent of public schools in this borough said: "Boys and girls leave my schools in large numbers from 10 to 12 years of age. Some leave before they are 10 years." In my visit through silk and hoisery mills, rope and school-slate factories, cigar and candy establishments, I saw ansemic children under the legal age, with frail consti

Factory Inspector Betchel was appointed last June, over 500 children lilegally employed were found in Berks County alone. In one borough he sent home 45 children from 9 to 12 years who were employed contrary to law. He prosecuted the mayor of the city of Reading for illegally giving two boys certificates of employment. The mayor paid a fine of $31$. He also successfully prosecuted an alderman for the same offense in the same city. In another city the factory inspector tried to prosecute an alderman who issued certificates of employment to children not legally qualified to work. He did not succeed, for the reason that no justice of the peace would try a "brother officer." One factory inspector candidly admitted that he could not discharge his duties in the town in which he resided. If he did, he would commit political suicide within six months. Another factory inspector successfully prosecuted an influential employer. The suit cost the employer $400$ and the inspector his office. The Central Labor Union of Lancaster prosecuted the leading factory in the city for employing children contrary to law. The case has never been tried, and the officers of the union can not find out the reason why. Sometimes factory inspectors "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." A poor organ grinder in one of our cities was fined $25$ and costs for employing a boy not 13 years of age to help him. In the same city a factory wherein 900 persons labor has from 50 to 60 children employed contrary to law, but this transgressor has not been prosecuted. Another store-keeper was prosecuted for employing a girl under 13 years of age, and nothing is done about it. The heads of large factories are invariably a power in the politics of the town or city wherein they reside, and the factory inspectors are appointees of the "machine."

**Some employers transgress the factory laws of the State in working children under 16 years of age and adult females more than sixty

Some employers transgress the factory laws of the State in working children under 16 years of age and adult females more than sixty hours a week. The chief transgressors in this respect are the silk and hosiery mills, the cigar, school slates, box, and umbrella factories. These industries have their busy seasons, during which the employees work overtime. In one factory little girls were kept working from 1 o'clock till 8 without respite—a continuous stretch of seven hours. Sometimes one department in a large factory falls behind the others, and the employer offers a premium to the employees to "catch up." Under this pressure I saw boys under 15 years of age working fourteen hours a day. The mother of three young girls who worked overtime said: "It's from bed to work and from work to bed." These children got up at 6 o'clock in the morning and worked till 8 o'clock in the evening. When questioned about the time they had for the noonday meal and how they used it, one of the girls said: "I take a nap, when I can, on the bales."

Spargo says this on violation of law, on page 168:

Spargo says this on violation of law, on page 168:

In the canning and preservation of fish, fruit, and vegetables mere babies are employed during the busy season. In more than one canning factory in New York State I have seen children of 6 and 7 years of age working at 2 o'clock in the morning. In Oneida Mr, William English Walling, formerly a factory inspector of Illinois, found one child 4 years old who earned 19 cents in an afternoon stringing beans, and other children from 7 to 10 years of age. There are over 500 canning factories in New York State, but the census of 1900 gives the number of children employed under 16 years of age as 219. This is merely another illustration of the deceptiveness of the New York Child Labor Committee was told by the foreman of one factory that there were 300 children under 14 years of age in that one factory! In Syracuse it was a matter of complaint in the season of 1904 on the part of the children that "the factories will not take you unless you are 8 years old."

In Maryland there are absolutely no restrictions placed upon the employment of children in canneries. They may be employed at any age, by day or night, for as many hours as the employers choose or the children can stand and keep awake. In Oxford, Md., I saw a tiny girl, 7 years old, who had worked for twelve hours in an oyster-canning factory, and I was told that such cases were common. There were 290 canning establishments in the State of Maryland in 1900, all of them employing young children absolutely without legal restriction. And I fear that it must be added with little or no moral restriction either. Where regard for child life does not express itself in humane laws for its preservation, it may generally be presumed to be non-existent.

In Maine the age limit for employment is 12 years. Children of that laws for its preservation, it may generally be presumed to be nonexistent.

In Maine the age limit for employment is 12 years. Children of that age may be employed by day or night, provided that girls under 18 and boys under 16 are not permitted to work more than ten hours in the twenty-four or sixty hours in a week. In 1900 there were 117 establishments engaged in the preservation and canning of fish. Small herrings are canned and placed upon the market as "sardines." This industry is principally confined to the Atlantic coast towns—Lubec and Eastport, in Washington County, being the main centers. I can not speak of this industry from personal investigation, but information received from competent and trustworthy sources gives me the impression that child slavery nowhere assumes a worse form than in the "sardine" canneries of Maine. Says one of my correspondents in a private letter: "In the rush season fathers, mothers, older children, and babies work from early morn till night—from dawn till dark, in fact. You will scarcely believe me, perhaps, when I say and babies, but it is literally true. I've seen them in the present season no more than 4 or 5 years old working hard and beaten when they lagged. As you may suppose, being out here, far away from the center of the State, we are not much troubled by factory inspection. I have read equals for sheer brutality what I see right here in Washington County.

At the last session of the legislature of North Carolina a deter-

At the last session of the legislature of North Carolina a determined effort was made to perfect the absurdly inadequate law of that State. This was led by Dr. A. J. McKelway, whose affidavits you have heard, and who is a resident and one of the most esteemed citizens of that Commonwealth. The manufacturers had resisted all previous attempts to get a good law, which resistance resulted in the present inefficient statute.

The effort to make the law general and provide for compulsory education was as bitterly resisted by the mill owners at the last session of the North Carolina legislature as similar interests resisted compulsory education and good law in West Virginia.

I here insert some of the statements made by these mill owners, without giving their names, for I do not want to subject them to public condemnation unless they compel it. I read, however, from the stenographer's notes of the hearing before the legislative committee. One of them said:

In the first place the employees themselves can not do without the wages they earn in the mills; in the next place, the mills of North Carolina can not do without the help. That is all there is to it. You may go into any mill, I do not care where it is, and you will find the proprietors doing all they can to help the cause of education.

I will tell you how it was last year with the mill people. Why, the farmers took the children and put them to work on their farms picking cotton. The law has nothing to do with picking cotton.

I want to say that England is still reaching out for more cotton. She is building more cotton mills. She is mistress of the sea. She has got more consumers than any Nation on earth; and yet she is doing everything she can to get more of these people in the cotton mills, and they are going there—building more mills every year.

If it has had such a terrible effect in reducing the stature of the men so that the army could not be recruited, what I would like to know is why are they building more cotton mills and why are they going to all parts of the globe and doing everything to get the cotton into England? It seems to me there is no common sense in that argument.

Another mill owner said:

I do not think that the legislature of North Carolina ought ever to undertake any class legislation. As a principle, I believe it is wrong. However, we see the recurrence of this trouble in two years, and we will have it every two years hereafter, as we have it up North.

We find out who will go to school, and we get in extra help and turn out the little fellows who will go to school and send them to school. This is the best we can do, and all we can do. But we do not want laws that force some of our people, and will make them move back to their farms because they can not get support at the mill.

Enact this law, and it results that a great number of my people can not make a living at the mill and will have to go back to their farms or get out of the range of the law by moving to South Carolina where they are not tampered with.

Our conditions can not be compared with the Eastern States. We down here use more small labor, more cheap labor than they can use in the Eastern States, for the simple reason that we are spinners of yarn down here, largely, and those people up there are consumers of yarn. We spin—the boys and the girls spin the yarn and the women and the men run the looms and the knitting machines. That is the

Another mill owner said:

Of course the edict of the Almighty is "By the sweat of thy brow thou shalt get thy bread." That is that the large majority of the people shall always be simply working people, that a man who has nothing whatever but his right hand to work for him and for his wife and children has a very hard time in this world.

The sentiment that gives so much force to the idea which Doctor McKelway represents comes from the class that sleeps late in the morning—professors, teachers, and ladies who have time to cultivate their kindness of heart, and they get in the habit of sleeping late in the morning, and they get in the habit of thinking that a man who has to get up at 5 o'clock in the morning is a very much downtrodden person.

Of course, this mill owner is right-it is a fine thing for a child to get up at 5 o'clock in the morning and work twelve hours, standing all the time.

Another mill owner said:

It will ruin the mill interests of North Carolina. I say again, gentlemen, from a Democratic standpoint, it is wisdom for you gentlemen to let the bill stand as it is.

It was "visdom" from a Democratic standpoint "to let the law stand," said this mill owner at this hearing of the North Carolina legislature, and they were "vise"—they let it stand.

Another mill owner said:

And it was a distinct understanding that if the compromise were made, we would not be brought here for years and years to come. It was well known upon that occasion, gentlemen, and it was argued upon that occasion, that it was unnecessary to enact laws, to make laws, binding upon the textile mills of North Carolina.

I say to you, gentlemen, that the mill industry of North Carolina represents the "best people" of North Carolina.

"Best people" again, you see; only this time they are not in Georgia but in North Carolina.

I say to you, gentlemen, that there is no doubt as to their intention to help. I say to you, gentlemen, that it was unwise two years ago to have enacted any legislation at all. But we bowed our heads in humble submission to your will, with the distinct understanding that we were to have no further legislation upon this point.

You see this mill owner didn't want any legislation at all, and he actually "submitted" to the law upon the "understanding" that no more laws would ever be passed.

This same mill owner goes on:

This same mill owner goes on:

Now, gentlemen, I have investigated this matter and I say that if the McKelway bill is passed that it will clog the wheels of industry in North Carolina for ever and ever. I say, gentlemen, that you must come down to this in a practical, common-sense way and investigate what effect it would have on the mills of North Carolina not to allow children of 13 to work in the mills; estimate what it would have not to allow children of 16 years of age to work at night. I say to you when you take that little boy out of the mill, take the little spinner out of the mill, you might as well sweep that mill out of existince. existence.

And I say to you, furthermore, that it is not hardly possible that South Carolina will crowd out her mills. And what will the people at Rockingham, Charlotte, and those other towns that are near to McCall and Columbia—what will these mills do? Their help will leave our mills and flock to this other State where they can find employment for their children.

That's the heart of the whole trouble with the States stopping this infamy. If one does and another don't, the mill owners of the latter get the children of the former.

But I ask you for God's sake

Think of that appeal-

I ask you for the sake of these little children whom He is supposed to represent; I ask you for the sake of the men who have their money interested in this business; I ask you for the sake of the future interests in your grand old State of North Carolina to sit down on every bill they ever propose to you, and let these mill men go to their respective homes with the feeling that they will not every two years have the sword of Damocles over their necks.

Well, the North Carolina legislature could not resist such an appeal as that, of course. Who could?

Another mill owner says:

Another mill owner says:

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if the State of North Carolina is a better guardian of the girls and boys of North Carolina than their own parents, their own flesh and blood, why stop at the cotton-mill operatives? Why single them out? Let us pass a bill here that no girl under 14 years old shall run a sewing machine. Let us pass one that none shall use a typewriter; that no girl under 14 shall be a clerk in a store or be a stenographer. Are they not as much objects of the care and solicitude of the State of North Carolina as the factory girls? Why this discrimination? Why are they singled out?

Now, I know it is a fad to say that everything must give way to education. I can afford to say something about education, because I have always been a friend to education.

There is such a thing as carrying it [education] too far. There are other things in North Carolina it is your duty to face besides this [education]. There are the mill interests in North Carolina that ought to be considered. No State can be great, no State can hold any influence in this world, unless it is materially great.

And you can not have education without prosperity. Now this is education gone mad. You are about to sacrifice everything to education. I admit that young girls between 12 and 14 are at a critical point of their lives. There is no doubt about that. But, gentlemen, do you know that working in mills is not harder on them than other work that they have to do?

Notwithstanding the immense space taken up thus far, I can not resist the summing up of the whole thing by quoting from Miss Irene Ashby's article in the American Federationist, striking out of it every sentimental expression which this tender-hearted and brave-souled woman used. Senators may see the picture of this lady surrounded by the children whom she found in these mills with their lives being ruined. You may judge for yourselves from that fine face, and from the miserable faces of the children beside her, what a brave and high-souled woman Miss Ashby is and how infamous the system that would oppress the children which the photograph shows us here.

CHILD LIFE VS. DIVIDENDS. [Irene Ashby-Macfadyen.]

Here are three of them—three of the little slaves of capital, typical of the 20,000 children under 14 now toiling out their lives in the textile mills of the South. Mattie, the little one standing beside me, is 6 years old. She is a spinner. Inside a cotton mill for twelve hours a day she stands in the 4-foot passageway between the spinning frames where the cotton is spun from coarser into fine threads. As it comes down from the roping above now and then it breaks at some part of the long frame, and her baby fingers join the thread and set the bobbin moving again. From daylight to dark she is in the midst of the ceaseless throb and racket of machinery. When I first met her it was Christmas Eve—the eve of the children's festival, when the whole of Christendom celebrates the birth of the Child whose coming was to bring freedom to mankind, not to speak of freedom to children. She was crying, and when I asked the reason, said, between her sobs, that she wanted a doll that would open and shut its eyes. "When would you play with it?" I asked the little toiler, whose weary eyelids were ready to close over her tired eyes directly the long day's work was over. "I should have time a-plenty on Sunday," replied the little slave whose daily wage of 10 cents helped to swell the family income. There are thousands like her in the South.

Sally is only 9. Look into her worn face; not a trace of childhood's glad insouciance about it. It never changes from that fixed expression save when a wan smile crosses it in pitiful response to a kind word. For three long years she has done the same thing that little Mattle is only beginning. A few weeks before this picture was taken she broke down completely with nervous collapse. Continuous work, the hot, unhealthy mill atmosphere, proved too much for her childish brain. She could neither stand nor speak, and her limbs were shaken by conculsive movements. When this picture was taken she was slowly regaining a feeble kind of health, and in a week or two more would be back at her endless toi hands these little slaves are undermining the liberties of the future, not only of the cotton operatives of the South, but of the American working people; not only of the working people, but of the community in which they, for good or evil, are to play so large a part.

And what is the universal reply to your question "Why are they there?"

And what is the universal reply to your question "Why are they there?"

They are there, it is said "to attract northern capital"—a scathing comment on both those who sell and those who ask the sale. * * *

Take the number of children employed. Statistics are very difficult to obtain. * * *

There is but one of the Southern States in which there is a labor commission—North Carolina. Mr. B. R. Lacey, as labor commissioner, gives in his last report 7,605 children under 14 employed in 261 mills. Taking this as a general average would give at least 20,000 children under 14 in the textile mills of the South.

The Cincinnati Post recently sent a correspondent through the South to investigate the subject of child labor, simply as a matter of news, and particularly cautioned him not to exaggerate. Out of at least 1,000 children employed in five mills in Columbia, S. C., he estimates 400 to be under 12 years of age. Applying this proportion to the above figures would give, at the very lowest computation, 8,000 little children, infants, between 6 and 12, as operatives. He spoke personally to numbers of children who said they were 7 and 8, and others who were so little they did not know their own ages.

The Associated Press reported the president of the Whitney mills as stating before the legislature that 30 per cent of his operatives were under 12 years, which percentage, he says, referred only to the spinning room; but that is startling enough. Jamès K. Orr stated that 25 per cent of his machinery was run by children under 12 years. These cold percentages do not give an adequate expression of their meaning. To the horrified visitor the mills appear to be swarming with little children. The light and easy work of which the managers speak is to stand on their feet all day before a spinning frame, where the threads may break at one end or the other or in the middle at any moment, and when the thread breaks the spool stops and the thread is to be rejoined and the spool started again.

A baby has one frame to attend to, but most have two, many have three, and some have four or five. The boys are generally doffers or sweepers—that is, they have to change the bobbins on the frames as they become full and substitute empty ones. In the exercise of their work they often run 16 or 17 miles a day with their trucks. The little sweeper plies a broom bigger than himself to perform these actions, trivial in themselves, uninterruptedly for twelve hours a day on the average, with only one-half hour for rest and food.

Without regulation of hours there is no reason to prevent the mills working at night, and when they can do so profitably they avail themselves of this permission. I have talked with a little boy of 7 years who worked for forty nights in Alabama, and another child not 9 years old who at 6 years old had been on the night shift eleven months.

A clerk in a cotton mill told me that little boys turned out at 2 in the morning, too weary to do anything but fling themselves down for rest.

In South Carolina Miss Jane Addams, of Chicago, found a child of 5 working at night in the fine, large, new mills. Only a few weeks ago I stood at 10.30 at night in a mill in Columbia, S. C., controlled and owned by northern capital, w The Associated Press reported the president of the Whitney mills as stat-

SLAUGHTER OF INNOCENTS.

The physical, mental, and moral effect of these long hours of toil and confinement on the children is indescribably sad. Mill children are so stunted that every foreman, as you enter the mill, will tell you that you can not judge their ages. Children may look, he says, to be 11 or 11, and be in reality 14 or 15.

A horrible form of dropsy occurs among the children. A doctor in a city mill, who has made a special study of the subject, tells me that 10 per cent of the children who go to work before 12 years of age, after five years contract active consumption. The lint forms in their lungs a perfect cultivating medium for tuberculosis, while the change from the hot atmosphere of the mill to the chill night or morning air often brings on pneumonia, which frequently, if not the cause of death, is a forerunner of consumption.

How sternly the "pound of flesh" is insisted on by the various employers is illustrated by the case of two little boys of 9 and 11, who had to walk 3 miles to work on the night shift for twelve hours. One night they were five minutes late and were shut out, having to tramp the whole 3 miles back again. The number of accidents to those poor little ones, who do not know the dangers of machinery, is appalling. In Huntsville, Ala., in January, just before I was there, a child of 8 years, who had been a few weeks in the mills, lost the index and middle inger of her right hand. A child of 7 had lost her thumb a year previously.

In one mill city in the South a doctor fold a friend that he had perviously.

viously. In one mill city in the South a doctor told a friend that he had personally amputated more than a hundred babies' fingers mangled in the mill. A cotton merchant in Atlanta told me he had frequently seen mill children without fingers or thumb and sometimes without the whole

So frequent are these accidents that in some mills applicants for employment have to sign a contract that in case of injury in the mill the company will not be held responsible, and parents or guardians sign for minors.

No mill children look healthy. Anyone that does by chance, you are sure to find out, has but recently begun work. They are characterized by extreme pallor and an aged, worn expression infinitely pitiful and incongruous in a child's face. * * There is unfortunately no question as to the physical debasement of the mill child.

In the finest mill in Columbia, S. C., a magnificent example of splendid enterprise, I found a tiny girl of 5 years old in the spinning room. Her sunbonnet had fallen back onto her neck and her fair hair was covered with the threads that had fallen back on her head from the frame as she worked. She was helper to her sister. Neither child knew her age, but a girl of 8, standing near, told me they were 7 and 5, and worked there all day long. A beautiful little girl of 8, with hectic flush, told me she "hadn't worked but a year."

All holidays are "made up" in South Carolina. A strike occurred at one mill among some organized employees because they were required to make up Labor Day beforehand. They were locked out and starved into submission.

In Alabama the children in the mills are required to work Thanks-into submission.

In Alabama the children in the mills are required to work Thanksgiving Day.

In Georgia a child missing Saturday—a short day—loses one-sixth of her week's wages.

The wages paid these children bear out what I have said in regard to child labor keeping wages low. Many toil for 10 cents a day.

The average wage in North Carolina of the children under 14 is 22 cents a day, and in Georgia 25 cents is a liberal estimate. The Post correspondent gives a sample pay roll, showing an average of $1.43 a week in a certain spinning room for all children employed. I know of babies working for 5 and 6 cents a day. The girl of 9 I mentioned who has worked at night, when 6 years old received 12½ cents a night, and now earns $4.16 every two weeks. The two boys who walked 3 miles to their work received 12 and 15 cents a night.

In South Carolina the wages paid to children seem slightly higher. It is a significant fact that the last census figures show a drop in the average wages of cotton operatives during the past twenty years, although there is a slight rise in wages of children under 16. These figures also show that a smaller part of the labor of cotton mills was done by men in 1900 than in 1890, while children under 16 increased over 250 per cent, and women just over 100 per cent in that period. Child labor has increased beyond all proportion to labor of men and women, and while dividends average 35 per cent, and sometimes rise as high as 80 or 90 per cent, and n Columbia, S. C., run from 18 to 40 per cent, the average wage is steadily dropping.

In one large mill worked by northern capital, in Alabama, a widow and three children, the latter aged, respectively, 12, 9, and 8, worked for 47 cents a day between them.

* * * I know of a man in Alabama who was paid 45 cents a day, and num-

I know of a man in Alabama who was paid 45 cents a day, and numbers in South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama who earn from 60 to 75 cents a day. In South Carolina the coupon system is still used by the mills. Recent photographs taken in South Carolina show pay bags in which the whole cash was deducted for coupons, rent, and medicine. One operative is known to have worked for fourteen months without receiving a penny in cash, and of course the coupons are only good at the company's stores, where any price the couponay ses fit can be charged for the necessaries of life.

These wages and the condition of helplessness they indicate can only be perpetuated among very ignorant operatives, dependent on their work in the mills for the barest livelihood, incapable of organization, and terrorized into silence. This explains the carelessness of mill owners in regard to the most serious result of child labor—illiteracy. Common sense tells us that children working ten or twelve hours a day can not get an education, and experience confirms this. In my personal investigations I scarcely ever found a mill child who could read or write. Few knew their letters.

A count made a year ago in August showed 567 children under 12 working in eight mills. Of these, only 122 could read or write.

A count made a year ago in August showed 567 children under 12 working in eight mills. Of these, only 122 could read or write.

The mills claim to educate the children of the communities under their charge, and in a few exceptional cases they do, but in others their claim is not borne out by facts. In a large mill in South Carolina, where they say they have all school facilities, the entire enrollment of the village, containing between 6,000 and 8,000 persons, was 160 last February, and in another mill, making the same claim, there was an enrollment of 90 pupils. They were divided into two classes. When the school was visited twenty-two children were in one of these, only twelve of whom were mill employees' children, and ten had worked in the mills from one to three years. The teacher stated that the children were frequently sent for by the management to come into the spinning room out of school, and that in one room eight had been so recalled since the beginning of that school term.

I know of a mill in Alabama, owned entirely by northern capital, where two children of 9 and 11 were so recalled into the spinning room every time they ventured to take a few days at school, the girl never getting any education except when she was too sickly to work, while a boy was too weary after his day's "doffing" ever to go to night school.

The night-school teachers in Georgia, Alabama, and South Carolina all say it is impossible to teach the children much. They are too physically weary and sometimes can not keep awake.

It is a serious charge to make that the mill owners of the South, a cultured and frequently religious class, are perpetuating this horrible system, but I am afraid there is no doubt of it. I started my investigations with a good deal of sympathy with these captains of industry, who are facing all the risks of the establishment and upbuilding of a great trade. The personal courtesy and kindness many of them showed me almost blinded me at first to the meaning of their opposition to the campaign I show some of

CAMPAIGN FOR CHILD-LABOR LEGISLATION.

For eighteen months I have acted as the special agent of the American Federation of Labor on child-labor legislation in the Southern States.

In December, 1900, at the request of President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, I went to Alabama to gain support for a bill for the prevention of the employment of children in the factories of

As I recounted in my report of that campaign, the bill, the passage of which I was sent to assist, was dead before I reached Montgomery. Technically, this ended my mission; morally, it did not. If the evil was there, a dead bill was no reason for silence.

So I set to work, by personal investigation, to find out if, in this late hour of history, the crime of infant labor had, indeed, appeared in the new South hour of history, the crime of infant labor had, indeed, appeared in the new South.

I visited personally twenty-four mills in Alabama before the opening of the second session of the legislature at the end of January, 1901.

The state of affairs I discovered was truly appalling. In every one of these mills there were children under 12 years of age working from eleven to twelve hours a day. Six mills out of the twenty-four had worked within a year at night.

In the spinning rooms, brilliantly lighted with electric lights, fitted with the latest machinery turning out, hour after hour, the product which is making huge profits, were to be found little children working from dark until long past dawn, kept awake by cold water being dashed into their faces.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I yield.
Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I simply wish to interrupt the Senator for the purpose of calling his attention to the fact that in his reference a few moments ago to the child-labor laws of North Carolina he fell into an error.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What was it?

Mr. SIMMONS. As I understood the Senator, he stated that North Carolina had a child-labor law which prohibited children under 12 years of age from working in factories

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. But had no law which prohibited children from working in the mines and had no law which provided for an inspection.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The statement will be in the RECORD. I have sent it up to the desk.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is what the Senator said.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I beg the Senator not to take my time now, because I have got to go into the legal phase of the argu-

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator except to state that the same child-labor law in North Carolina applying to factories applies also to mines.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let it apply to mines. If it was an error, it was on the part of the stenographer. I am not mistaken about the facts, because I hold in my hands the stenographer's original notes about the efforts in North Carolina to defeat attempts to make that law a perfect law at the last session of the legislature.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not desire to enter into any controversy with the Senator, but simply to correct the error which the Senator made in his statement.

A WARNING TO THE SOUTH.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If there is any person on this floor, including the Senators from the South, who has a greater affection than I for that section of the country, from which I draw my own blood, I do not know it. And now I want to give a solemn warning to my brothers of the South.

I have had some conversation with my friends upon the other side who come from the South. There is one thing which I want to call to your attention. I do not know whether your at-tention has been called to it or not; certainly mine would not have been if I had not carefully studied the question. It is a serious question.

We have had much of this session taken up with a discussion of the race question. We have had the assertion of the supe riority of the white race made time and time again; that the white race would never yield to the black race.

Yet the children who are at work in the southern cotton mills are from the white working class of the South; and this terrible situation stares the South in the face that, whereas the children of the white working people of the South are going to the mill and to decay, the negro children are going to school and improvement.

I am glad to see the negro children going to school, but it is enough to wring the heart to think that day by day you are permitting a system to go on which is steadily weakening the white race for the future and steadily strengthening the black race for

It is not in the power of any man to keep "superior" by asserting superiority. The truth of it is the South is face to face with the situation of their white children in the mills and their black children in the schools.

CAN WE REPURLICANS ASK HIGH TARIFF ON CHILD-MADE GOODS?

There is another thing which we on this side—the Republican side-might as well take into account. I have here the present I was reading before I came up to the Capitol, after I got into the office, the tariff on cotton, the tariff on glass, the tariff on coal. I ask Senators who, like myself, are protectionists, With what grace can we go to the country asking that the tariff be continued on these things when the industries in these lines are supported by cheap child labor?

Mr. KEAN. There is no duty on anthracite coal.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is a duty on soft coal, and the tariff on anthracite coal was removed only for a year.

Mr. GALLINGER. It never was on.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, no matter. Maybe I have been misinformed upon that, but I don't think so. There is a tariff on glass, and I am glad of it. There is a tariff on soft coal, and I am glad of it. There is a tariff on cotton, and I am glad of it; and I also know some of the percentages of the dividends that are made out of those industries. I ask Senators and I ask them solemnly, how are the people to be asked to have any patience with us when we ask that those tariff rates be maintained if we refuse to deprive those very men of the additional commercial advantage of child labor?

A WARNING TO LABOR-EFFECT OF CHILD LABOR ON WAGES.

That is my warning to the South. And now I wish to speak right here another warning to labor, and I will ask to put into my remarks numerous statements made under oath to prove it. I want the laboring men and women of this country to understand what every labor leader knows—and if he does not know it he is not fit to be a labor leader or any other kind of a leader—that child labor tends to bring down manhood wages and womanhood wages to the child-wage level. You are not only killing your children, laboring men, but you are reducing your own manhood wages.

Now, I ask leave to insert without reading affidavits and statements proving nonenforcement of State laws everywhere. They prove the utter inadequacy of the States to handle this evil.

Mr. Spargo, whom I have already quoted on other subjects, uses these strong words on pages 198-200:

At bottom the employers, or rather the system of production for profit, must be held responsible for child labor. There are evidences of this on every hand. We see manufacturers in New Jersey and Pennsylvania getting children from orphan asylums, regardless of their physical, mental, and moral ruin, merely because it pays them. When the glass blowers of Minotola, N. J., went on strike in 1902 the child-labor question was one of their most important issues. The exposures made of the frightful enslavement of little children attracted wide-spread attention.

When the proprietor of the factory was asked about the employment of young boys 10 and 11 years of age, many of whom often fall asleep and were awakened by the men pouring water over them and at least two of whom died from overexhaustion, he said: "If two men apply to me for work and one has one or two or three children and the other has none, I take the man with children. I need the bays."

In the mills of the South it is frequently made a condition of the employment of married men nor women that all their children shall be bound to work in the same mills. The following is one of the rules posted in a South Carolina cotton mill:

"All children, members of a family, above 12 years of age shall work regularly in the mill, and shall not be excused from service therein without the consent of the superintendent for good cause."

Many times I have heard fathers and mothers—in the North as well as in the South—say that they did not want their children to work, that they could have done without the children's wages and kept them at school a little longer or apprenticed them to better employment, but they were compelled to send them into the mills to work or lose their own places. their own places.

With such facts as these before us, it is easy to see that the urgency of the employers' demands for child labor is an important factor in the problem. Underlying all other causes is the fundamental fact that the crploitation of the children is in the interests of the employing class.

It may be urged that it is necessary to begin work at an early age because the work they do can not be done by men or women, but the contention is wholly unsupported by facts. There is no work done by boys in the glass factories which men could not do; no skill or training is required to enable one to do the work done by breaker boys in the coal mines.

The work done by children in the textile mills could be done equally ing is required to enable one to do the work done by breaker boys in the coal mines.

The work done by children in the textile mills could be done equally well by adults. The fact that in some cases adults are employed to do the work which in other cases is done by children is sufficient proof that child labor is not resorted to because it is inevitable and necessary, but on account of its cheapness.

Going from factory to factory throughout the anthracite counties I sometimes came upon the sign "Girls wanted" nailed to the factory doors. Where the demand for silks and laces is good, as apparently it is most of the time in Pennsylvania, cheap child labor is in urgent demand. It is through it that Pennsylvania manufacturers are able to undersell New England manufacturers, for example. The available and eligible children are not so numerous that they can afford to scrutinize the age certificates too closely.

According to the State factory inspector, there are something over 17,000 girls between the ages of 13 and 16 working in the manufacturing establishments of the State. Of this number approximately 4,000 work all night in the textile mills—

This is nearly as bad as Georgia.

This is nearly as bad as Georgia.

And Mr. Spargo continues:

In some districts, especially in New Jersey, it has long been the custom to import boys from certain orphan asylums and "reformatories" to supply the demand of the manufacturers. These boys are placed in laborers' families, and their board paid for by the employers, who deduct it from the boys' wages. Thus a veritable system of child slavery has developed, remarkably like the old English pauperapprentice system.

Dr. Peter Roberts, in the Outlook, volume 78, September-December, 1904, on page 984, speaks as follows on the effect of child labor on wages:

Another wrong to tender boys and girls employed in silk mills is night work. This is confined to silk plants installed in the anthracite coal fields. In Allentown, Reading, South Bethlehem, Lancaster, etc., children do not work nights, for employers can not get children enough to operate their plants in the day. Mr. Cardiff, manager of a silk-throwing plant in South Bethlehem, said:

"The coal fields is the ideal place for a silk-throwing plant; you get cheap rent, cheap coal, cheap labor, and the parents don't object to have their children work nights."

Not in any other industrial center in eastern Pennsylvania are young girls employed in night work. Ten or fifteen years ago night work for girls was unknown in this State.

Miss Ashby says, on the effect of child labor on wages, in the World's Work, volume 2, May, 1901, to October, 1901, page 1292, these words:

The frequent plea that the people would starve were it not for their children's earnings is untrue. In the first place, the child seldom earns even its own food and clothes, and several intelligent operatives who had had children in the mill told me that anything these earned was so discounted by ill health that they had to take them out.

It is a well-established economic fact that the family wage is not increased by child labor. If the law forbids the working of the children, the older members of the family must be able to earn enough to support the younger. In time the family wage is actually lessened by child labor, for the standard of health, education, and needs are lowered.

In arguments bearing on the hardships to individuals of stopping

In arguments bearing on the hardships to individuals of stopping child labor, "the poor widow" bulks large. One's anxiety for the poor widow diminishes when one finds that she is made the excuse in every country for retaining child labor, and that when investigation is made her contribution in the shape of baby laborers is about 2 per cent, as recently shown in England.

And again, on page 1294, she says:

And again, on page 1294, she says:

In time, therefore, the earning, and with the earning the spending, capacity of workers in other trades will be lessened, and the development of local trade be checked, even though the cotton mills may make large dividends.

Another disastrous tendency of unregulated child labor is to substitute the woman and the child for the man. In North Carolina some of the mill owners speak complacently of their operatives being "loyal and peaceable, because composed chiefly of women and children." Many managers expressed the hope to me that they might soon be able to do without men almost entirely.

Mr. Owen R. Lovejoy in his article on "Schoolhouse or coal breaker," in volume 80 of the Outlook, May-August, 1905, on on page 1018, says."

on page 1018, says:

On page 1018, says:

The third factor contributing to the volume of child labor in this region is the attitude of the employer. One is everywhere assured that these children work in the breakers only during the summer months, beginning in April and returning to school when the snow falls. This is true of many of the boys, yet the breaker continues to run and the slate is picked from the coal at all seasons of the year. If the boys are not there in winter, by whom is the work performed? When the boys come on in the spring, whose places do they take at the coal chute? The fact is, a boy of 12 working for 50 cents or 60 cents a day, can do as much work in some parts of the breaker as a man who would demand $1 a day. The law of supply and demand explains the rest.

a man who would demand $1 a day. The law of supply and demand explains the rest.

Again, we should fall into error were we to conclude that the coal operator is greedy above other employers. He is a business man facing the problems of the business world. Competition with other producers is keen. The appetite of his stockholders for dividends is insatiable. The obvious duty of the superintendent of any department in the concern is to get the work done as efficiently and cheaply as possible. Frequently employers when questioned regarding certain little boys in the breaker have replied with unconcern. "We have their certificate of age all right. That lets us out."

EFFECT ON WAGES.

Mr. Kellogg Durland, whose affidavit I have already presented, in his article of May 9, 1903, on "Child labor in Pennsylvania," published in volume 74 of the Outlook, May-August, 1903, says this as to the effect of child labor on wages, on page

Going from factory to factory throughout the anthracite counties, I sometimes came upon the sign "Girls wanted" nailed to the factory doors. Where the demand for silks and laces is good, as apparently it is most of the time in Pennsylvania, cheap child labor is in urgent demand. It is though it that Pennsylvania manufacturers are able to undersell New England manufacturers, for example. The available and eligible children are not so numerous that they can afford to scrutinize the age certificates too closely.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE LAW. I.

Mr. President, I come now to the constitutionality of this

Mr. ALDRICH. Would it interrupt the Senator from Indiana if I were to ask him a single question?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not a bit.

Mr. ALDRICH. I agree fully with the Senator as to the serious character of this problem, and I should like him, in considering the constitutional aspect of the question, if he will, to give his opinion upon one subject.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. We have in New England laws prohibiting, for obvious reasons, the employment of women and children for more than fifty-eight hours a week. In the South women and children are employed from sixty-six to seventy-two hours a week, we will say. Does the Senator think it is possible that week, we will say. Does the Senator think it is possible that Congress can constitutionally regulate the hours of labor in a State for humanitarian reasons?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will answer that question when I come to it. Very frankly I will say to the Senator that as to the question of power, constitutional power, so far as the products of that labor enter into interstate commerce, I have not the slightest doubt of it. The question of policy is a different thing. What I propose that we shall do is to differentiate the question of constitutional power to pass this bill from the question of policy, with which Senators are confusing it.

Mr. ALDRICH rose.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, please let me go on with that. The Senator from Oregon asked practically the same question. I do not think there is any question about the power. I think it has been clearly decided. I hope the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman], who wants to be converted on the constitutional side, will give me as much of his attention as he can during my discussion.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am particularly anxious, as no doubt all other Senators are, to hear the Senator's legal argument. He has already been speaking over three hours.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have. Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to him in all kindness that he must be tired, and that several of us would like to hear him in the morning, when we are more fresh, because it is going to take a great deal of argument to convert me, I assure him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I would be glad to yield, but I am afraid to-morrow is preempted. I would otherwise be glad to yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will be back in a moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All right. Now, to get into the constitutional phase of this question.

WHY THE CONSTITUTION WAS ADOPTED.

Of course it is not necessary or perhaps admissible for anybody in addressing a body of men like this to refer to the purposes of the Constitution or why the Articles of Confederation were abandoned and the reasons for having the Constitution. Everyone is familiar with them. There was an utter breakdown of government because each of the States under the Articles of Confederation imposed all kinds of commercial regulations, and it became necessary, if the Government was to hang together any longer, to give Congress all the power over the subject of regulating commerce which the States before had, so far as concerned commerce with foreign nations and among the several States

Will any Senator here who adheres to the theory of strict construction contend that before the Constitution was adopted each State did not have absolute power over commerce within its own borders—power to regulate, power to prohibit, power to do anything? I pause for a reply. I hear none. The power of the States over commerce was absolutely sovereign under the Articles of Confederation. Of course no Senator will deny that.

But all such power which the States had under the Articles of Confederation were by the Constitution given to Congress. The States parted with that power absolutely, and the power given to Congress, so far as interstate traffic is concerned, is as complete and absolute as the power of the State over State commerce. Of course those are only fundamentals. That power over commerce among themselves which the States had under the Articles of Confederation-and all the power they had over such commerce—was given to the Nation under the Constitution.

It was given in a clause with which every lawyer, of course, is more than familiar, and with which every law student is familiar.

The absolute power which the States had under the Articles of Confederation was given to Congress in the following words of the Constitution:

The Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian

"To regulate commerce." What did that phrase mean? It had a definite and distinct meaning at that time. It had a "legal meaning" at that time. Also, it had a "popular" meaning at that time; and they were all the same. The laws concerning the "regulation of commerce" with which the colonists were familiar, with which the statesmen of that day were familiar, and all the lawyers were familiar, were the laws of England, from which country we had recently separated.

MEANING OF PHRASE "TO REGULATE COMMERCE."
Nobody will deny that. Very well. There were in existence at the time the Constitution was adopted some twenty-seven acts of the English Parliament in which the phrase "to regulate commerce" occurs. In each one of them those words means in those laws "prohibition" of commerce in some form or other or in some article of commerce.

So when the fathers lifted out of the English statutes and put into the Constitution the phrase "to regulate commerce," they lifted out words that had a definite meaning in the acts of the British Parliament which were directly before them, which had affected them, and which in every instance meant to "prohibit" commerce in some manner or in some article.

So we see that the scope of this power given to Congress by the Constitution is very broad indeed, and I will not take up very much time in reading to the Senate decisions of the Supreme Court showing how absolutely unlimited it is. For instance, as showing the scope of this power, the breadth of it, what can be done under it, perhaps no better illustration can be found than that of the very early case of the United States v. Coombs, which is reported in 12 Peters. That was in 1838

Congress passed a law providing for the criminal punishment of anybody who recovered any wreckage from a ship that was washed above high tide. Coombs was indicted under that statute. He defended upon the ground that there was no authority in Congress to pass any such law; that it impaired the police power of the States. The Supreme Court held that it was a valid law, not under the admiralty clause, because they held that the admiralty clause did not reach the water mark above tidewater. But the Supreme Court held that it was a proper exercise of the power of Congress under the Constitution, under the clause of the Constitution which gives to Congress the power to regulate commerce, and not at all a violation of the police powers of the States. Justice Story, the second greatest jurist we ever had-

Mr. NELSON. Please give the title of the case.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. United States v. Coombs, 12 Peters, page 78.

Mr. Justice Story, in deciding that case, said:

Mr. Justice Story, in deciding that case, said:

But we are of the opinion that under the clause of the Constitution giving power to Congress "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States" Congress possessed the power to punish offenses of the sort which are enumerated in the ninth section of the act of 1825, now under consideration. The power to regulate commerce includes the power to regulate navigation, as connected with the commerce of foreign nations and among the States. It was so held and decided by this court, after the most deliberate consideration, in the case of Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat, 189-198). It does not stop at the mere boundary line of a State, nor is it confined to acts done on the water or in the necessary course of the navigation thereof.

Then the Supreme Court goes on to set out the scape of the

Then the Supreme Court goes on to set out the scope of the power, that it includes such a law, for example, so widely removed as a law making it a criminal offense for any person to recover the wreckage of a ship. This man had stolen some wreckage which had been washed ashore. They held that it was a burden on commerce, and, therefore, the interstate and foreign commerce clause of the Constitution covered it; that it was a regulation of foreign commerce. I merely cite that case to show how broad the power is.

"REGULATE" AND "PROHIBIT."

It was not very long after the Constitution was adopted until there arose the very question which we have here raised, the question as to whether under the commerce clause Congress had the power, in regulating commerce, to "prohibit" commerce in any article, and that was decided in the affirmative in the case which every lawyer has had by heart since he went to law school-in Gibbons v. Ogden, in the great opinion by Chief Justice Marshall

He took up the question of embargo laws, going on to show, first, that the power over interstate commerce was precisely the same as over foreign commerce.

We had been confronted with the exercise of the power of Congress to prohibit commerce in the embargo act, one of the very first acts passed, and that was done exclusively under the clause, says the Supreme Court, giving Congress power over foreign commerce.

The universally acknowledged power of the Government to impose embargoes must also be considered as showing that all America is united in that construction which comprehends navigation in the word "commerce."

When Congress imposed that embargo, which for a time engaged the attention of every man in the United States, the avowed object of the law was the protection of commerce and the avoiding of war. By its friends and its enemies it was treated as a commercial, not as a war measure. The persevering earnestness and zeal with which it was opposed in a part of our country which supposed its interests to be vitally affected by the act can not be forgotten. A want of acuteness in discovering objections to a measure to which they felt the most deeprooted hostility will not be imputed to those who were arrayed in opposition to this. Yet they never suspected that navigation was no branch of trade, and was, therefore, not comprehended in the power to regulate commerce. They did, indeed, contest the constitutionality of the act, but on a principle which admits the construction for which the appellant contends. They denied that the particular law in question was made in pursuance of the Constitution, not because the power could not act directly on vessels, but because a perpetual embargo was the annihilation, and not the regulation of commerce. In terms they admitted the applicability of the words used in the Constitution to vessels; and that, in a case which produced a degree and an extent of excitement calculated to draw forth every principle on which legitimate resistance could be sustained. No example could more strongly illustrate the universal understanding of the American people on this subject.

Then Chief Justice Marshall gets more directly to the question of "prohibition." Speaking of and defining the power to "regulate commerce," Chief Justice Marshall says:

It is the power to regulate—that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed. This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution. These are expressed in plain terms and do not affect the questions which arise in this case or which have been discussed at

If, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government, having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States

Then Chief Justice Marshall takes up the answer to the argument that the power might be "abused," which I intend to delay to a later part of my own argument, which is chiefly the argument here interposed to this bill.

UNITED STATES v. MARIGOLD.

Of course this is still on the general scope of the power. But the Supreme Court soon held directly-decided directlythe power of prohibition.

That was done in the case of the United States v. Marigold. In United States v. Marigold Congress had passed a law solely and exclusively under the interstate and foreign commerce clause, "prohibiting" the importation of counterfeit coin, and providing a penalty for doing it. It was conceded in the opinion, it was conceded in the pleas, and it was conceded in passing the act that the only authority for it was to be found in the clause regulating commerce among the States and with foreign nations.

Marigold imported some of this coin; he was indicted under this law, and he resisted upon the ground, among others, that there was no authority in Congress; that that was a police power of the State.

The inquiry first propounded-

Says the Supreme Court in deciding this question, and Justice Daniel delivered the opinion-

The inquiry first propounded upon this record points obviously to the answer which concedes to Congress the power here drawn in the answer which concedes to Congress the power here drawn in question.

Congress is, by the Constitution, vested with the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and however at periods of high excitement an application of the terms "to regulate commerce," such as would embrace absolute prohibition, may have been questioned, yet since the passage of the embargo and nonintercourse laws and the repeated judicial sanctions those statutes have received, it can scarcely at this day be open to doubt that every subject falling within the legitimate sphere of commercial regulation may be partially or wholly excluded when either measure shall be demanded by the safety or by the important interests of the entire Nation.

Such exclusion can not be limited to particular classes or descriptions of commercial subjects; it may embrace manufactures, bulllon, coin, or any other thing. The power once conceded, it may operate on any apply it.

Will the Senator give us the book and page? Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; United States v. Marigold, 9 Howard, page 560, and he will find the portion of the opinion which I quoted on page 567.

Mr. President, that, of course, was a direct, definite declaration that the casuistry of no lawyer in the United States or elsewhere can escape, that the power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is absolute and includes the power to "prohibit" any subject of commerce from interstate or foreign commerce. The decision is so clear, emphatic, and unequivocal that it would not be proper for me to waste time in commenting upon it.

The next case in which this absolute power of Congress, under the clause which I have quoted-

Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes—is sustained in equally emphatic and unavoidable language, is the case of the United States v. Forty-three Gallons of Whisky. That is the title of the case.

THE FORTY-THREE GALLONS OF WHISKY CASE.

It is a case which every one knows, and one with which my friend the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] is particularly familiar, because it occurred in the county of Polk, in the State of Minnesota. It was the case of a libel by the Government of forty-three gallons of whisky that had been brought into the State of Minnesota and into the county of Polk. That county was not within an Indian reservation. It had been at one time, but it had become an organized county of the State.

It had nothing to do with the Indians any more than a county in Ohio or Indiana. But forty-three gallons of whisky had been taken into that county, and I think some of it was sold to an Indian who happened to be a member of a tribe living in some other portion of the State.

The owner of the whisky resisted the libel upon the ground that the act of Congress under which he was prosecuted was beyond the power of Congress to pass. He said that this was purely within a State. He said it was not even within the limits of an Indian reservation; that it could not possibly be any trade with an Indian tribe, and that in any event Congress had no power to "prohibit;" that "prohibiting" was not "regulating commerce" with the Indian tribes.

And so the question that we have here, as in the case of the United States v. Marigold, was directly before the court in the case of Forty-three Gallons of Whisky.

Congress, under its constitutional power to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes, may not only "prohibit" the unlicensed introduc-tion and sale of spirituous liquors in the "Indian country." but extend such prohibition to territory in proximity to that occupied by Indians.

In deciding the case—and the opinion was rendered by Mr. Justice Davis-the Supreme Court uses the language which I will read. The whole question of the power of Congress under this clause was examined, and the court says:

Under the articles of confederation, the United States had the power of regulating the trade and managing all affairs with the Indians not members of any of the States; provided, that the legislative right of a State within its own limits be not infringed or violated. Of necessity these limitations rendered the power of no practical value. This was seen by the Convention which framed the Constitution; and Congress now has the exclusive and absolute power to "regulate commerce"—

We are trying to find out what the words "to regulate" mean, are we not?-

with the Indian tribes—a power as broad and as free from restrictions as that to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

Having thus defined the power, he goes on:

The Indian country, as defined by the act of 1834, was at that date so remote from settlements that there was no occasion to extend the prohibition beyond its limits. It has since then been so narrowed by successive treatles that the white population is now all around it and regarding it with a wistfui eye.

In view of this changed condition it would be strange indeed if the commercial power, lodged solely with Congress and unrestrained as it is by State lines, did not extend to the cxclusion of spirituous liquors intended to corrupt the Indians not only from existing Indian country, but from that which has ceased to be so by reason of its cession to the United States.

But if Congress under the compressible leaves because

But if Congress, under the commercial clause, has power to "prohibit" the introduction of whisky made of corn, why has it not the power to "prohibit" the transportation of goods made by children? So far as the power is concerned, does the material or its method of manufacture have anything to do with the

It might have something to do with the policy, but does it have anything to do with the power? For, mark you, the power of Congress over the regulation of commerce with the Indian tribes is precisely the same, and not otherwise in any respect, as is the power to regulate commerce among the several States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Please give the volume.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Ninety-three United States, page 188.

The quotation is on pages 191 and 196.

Perhaps as important a case in its indirect holding as any, except the one next after that, that I shall come to, which is the famous Rahrer case, which grew out of a provision of the Wilson bill, and the Wilson bill grew out of the decision of the Iowa liquor cases, did it not? The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] will remember.

Mr. RAYNER. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me a moment?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. I am listening to this legal argument with great interest. Suppose we pass a law here providing that no goods shall be transported from State to State not made by a labor union; have we the power to do that?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We have the power to do that, but it would be poor policy. Chief Justice Marshall answered your question.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to see where Chief Justice Marshall or any Chief Justice, judge, or lawyer answered that ques-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He has answered it.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to see that decision.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am going to come to that in a moment;

but I want to get through with these decisions. All there is in the Senator's suggestion is the old argument about the "abuse of power"-that if you concede the power to do this, then you have the power to do that; and because you have that power you will do it, of course, and that would be a bad thing, and therefore you have not any power at all-that's your argument.

I will come to all that argument in a minute. There is no question about our power, but nobody would do it. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] was asked that question by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] in the discussion of the quarantine bill. I have the answer of the Senator from Wisconsin here. I am sorry he has not honored me with his presence this afternoon, since he said that he is interested in the constitutional phase. He said the question is unthinkable, because nobody is ever going to propose such a thing as that. That was exactly the answer Benjamin Franklin gave when practically the same question was put to him before the bar of the British Parliament when he was being examined there.

It is not to be assumed that the representatives of an intelligent people are going to be so foolish as to do anything like that suggested by the Senator. But that has nothing to do with the power; and as a portion of my constitutional argument I am going to meet that, because the Supreme Court has taken up exactly that question. I shall do it later on to the Senator's satisfaction, unless, of course, he is determined not to be satisfied about our power to end this universal infamy of child labor,

THE RAHRER CASE.

I wish to read the Rahrer case. There is not a great deal of it, but in its direct motive it is probably as important as'the Marigold case, or probably as important as the case of Lesey v. Hardin-I think that is the name of the Iowa liquor case. In that case-Lesey v. Hardin-the court held, as we all remember, that the State of Iowa had no power whatever over the importation into that State of liquor as long as it was kept in the original package.

To meet that a provision was put in the Wilson bill, that in any State the subjects of interstate commerce were subjected to the laws of any State when they reach there. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] shakes his head.

Mr. BACON. Not when they reach there. Does the Senator mean when they reach there?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; it was broader than that—the laws of the various States. I am glad the Senator corrected me there, because it makes the argument all the more important. This case arose in the State of Kansas, which prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors.

It was brought up, I believe, on a test case, where the liquor was in an original package, and only in an original package, and it was attempted to be disposed of by the agent of one dealer who lived in Kansas City. It was seized under the laws of the State of Kansas.

The law of the State of Kansas was strengthened by the section of the Wilson bill which subjected all articles of inter-state commerce to the laws of the various States. The case came to the Supreme Court of the United States. Rahrer, who was resisting the law, said that it was unconstitutional because it violated that clause of the Constitution which gives Congress power over commerce among the States.

But the Supreme Court held that that had been obviated by the Wilson bill subjecting all interstate commerce to the laws of the various States, and in so holding here is what the court said.

The opinion was delivered by Chief Justice Fuller:

The opinion was delivered by Chief Justice Fuller:

By the adoption of the Constitution the ability of the several States to act upon the matter solely in accordance with their own will was extinguished, and the legislative will of the General Government substituted. No affirmative guaranty was hereby given to any State of the right to demand as between it and the others what it could not have obtained before; while the object was undoubtedly sought to be attained of preventing commercial regulations partial in their character or contrary to the common interests. And the magnificent growth and prosperity of the country attest the success which has attended the accomplishment of that object. But this furnishes no support to the position that Congress could not, in the exercise of the discretion reposed in it, concluding that the common interests did not require entire freedom in the traffic—

"Entire freedom in the traffic mind you.

"Entire freedom in the traffic, mind you-in ardent spirits, enact the law in question.

But this amounts absolutely, as was pointed out at the time and was pointed out in every law journal and discussion in the United States when the Rahrer decision was handed down, as the Senator from Maryland very well knows, to a prohibition of commerce in liquors or in anything else, that Congress might by a law subject to the laws of the various States.

And because the law of Kansas prohibited the sale of such articles of interstate commerce, and if it prohibited the sale of it, as was said in Brown v. Maryland, it prohibited the thing itself; it amounted to the exclusion of it.

As the Senator from Georgia pointed out a moment ago, when he very properly corrected me, every State might have a law prohibiting the sale of spirituous liquors or of anything else of child-made goods, for example-and if an act of Congress putting all subjects of interstate commerce under the operation of the State laws is valid, then Congress has in itself actually prohibited and excluded from interstate commerce this article. That was the thing that so excited the bar and the country.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me to osk him a question, I do not propose to argue it at all, but I wish the Senator's view of it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am very glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. BACON. Even if we concede the power of Congress to prohibit the introduction of an article, does the Senator recognize no difference between the power to prohibit the introduction of an article vicious in itself or objectionable for any reason, as most of these decisions pass upon questions of that kind, and an article not objectionable in itself, not vicious, or in any manner detrimental to the public good-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand the Senator's question.

Mr. BACON. An article thus not objectionable, but where the point of the objection simply is as to the manner in which it has been produced in the State?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator asks me that as a question of Mr. BACON. I am asking the Senator's view, whether or not he recognizes any distinction between the two.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand your question. As a question of power, no; none in the world.

Mr. BACON. None whatever? Mr. BEVERIDGE. But, yes; as a question of policy. have the power. It is a power which we can abuse. But if we do abuse that power, which in us is unlimited, the remedy is at the ballot box, as was pointed out by Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden, where the very question was raised. No; I recognize no distinction whatever so far as the power is concerned.

Mr. BACON. Now, if the Senator will permit me— Mr. BEVERIDGE. So far as policy is concerned, of course; and I will say another thing. The Senator is a very learned lawyer, and he will recall that the Supreme Court has decided over and over again that the question of policy was something for us to pass upon, and upon which the Supreme Court itself has absolutely refused to pass.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to ask the Senator this question, Is the logical conclusion of his position intended by him to go to this extent or to be thus understood, that Congress has the arbitrary power to prohibit the introduction of any article from one State into another State regardless of the reason upon which it may put that prohibition?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, sir; I can show—

Mr. BACON. Practically unlimited power?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can show it.

Mr. BACON. To prohibit it absolutely?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; to prohibit it absolutely.
Mr. BACON. That is the logic of the Senator's argument.
Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. Would not that, followed to its logical conclusion, mean that Congress could absolutely prohibit commerce among the States?

Mr. BACON. Of course.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly. That question was raised in Gibbons v. Ogden. The Senator certainly did not hear me read from Chief Justice Marshall's opinion.

Mr. FULTON. That Congress can prohibit commerce between the States?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; he said the argument would be exactly the argument made now.

Mr. FULTON. No such argument has ever been pronounced in Gibbons v. Ogden or any other case. It can not be found in any case.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.
Mr. OVERMAN. I call the attention of the Senator to a paragraph in the Rahrer case that he did not read:

The power of the State to impose restraints and burdens upon persons and property in conservation and promotion of the public health, good order, and prosperity—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know what the Senator is going to read. If he is reading to me he can stop, because I am familiar with it. Nobody questions that.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will not read it all, but let me finish the sentence:

is a power originally and always belonging to the States, not sur-rendered by them to the General Government nor directly restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and essentially exclusive.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator might as well read me something from the Bible. Nobody questions that. That has not anything to do with the particular point to which I was calling the attention of the Senate.

Now, I call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to this. In Gibbons v. Ogden there was a definition of the power to pass an embargo law. An embargo was an absolute prohibition of commerce, and the argument was made against it that we had no such power under the Constitution, because, they said, it meant the annihilation of commerce. Here is what Chief Justice Marshall said-

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator mean to contend that the power of Congress over foreign commerce is the same as its power over domestic commerce?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am coming to that in a minute. Here are the decisions. Does the Senator see those three cases there [indicating]?

Mr. ALDRICH. I see the books. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator from Rhode Island deny that our power over foreign commerce is precisely the same as our power over interstate commerce, and that our power over interstate commerce is exactly as great as the power over foreign commerce? Does the Senator contend that—
Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand the decisions of the court, they are that our power over foreign commerce, under two clauses of the Constitution, is absolute. But they have never said that as to domestic commerce, in my opinion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall read in just a moment the decisions of the Supreme Court where they do say exactly that in so many words—that the power of Congress over domestic commerce is precisely the same as it is over foreign commerce. In the exercise of that power, I am going to call the Senator's attention to something the Senator himself helped to do.

Mr. RAYNER. Will the Senator allow me? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. RAYNER. Only for a question.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.
Mr. RAYNER. Is it not the logical result of your argument, leaving out the question of policy, that we have the power to pass a law here to-day absolutely prohibiting commercial intercourse between the States? I am speaking of the power now, not the policy.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will permit me, I will answer him in the language of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner], who I expected to ask me just that question, but he has gone away, for some reason. So I prepared to answer him out of his own mouth. The Senator from Texas [Mr. Bailey] asked the Senator from Wisconsin a question about like that.

Mr. RAYNER. No; I do not want that.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. When the Senator asks me a question he must let me answer it in my own way. The Senator from Wisconsin answered the question this way: "Well, it is an impossible question. Congress would never think of passing such a

Mr. RAYNER. I want to say to the Senator that this is not a lawyer's answer, because nothing is impossible if we have the power. I am not asking about the policy.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; things are impossible to the Senator if he considers his constituents and desires to retain his

Mr. RAYNER. I do not care enough about the seat upon such a principle.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am answering the Senator in my own language, and I happen to be using the language of a very fair lawyer. Chief Justice Marshall said that very thing, that when we abuse the power-

Mr. RAYNER. But I want the Senator's opinion. I want to know if we can pass a law here to-day absolutely prohibiting commercial intercourse between the States-whether that will be the exercise of constitutional power. I should like to have an answer to that question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I say it is an impossible question.

Mr. RAYNER. That is your answer to it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let me suggest to the Senator a question. Will you ask me whether or not I think we have the power to prohibit the transportation in interstate commerce of the milk of a cow milked by a young lady 18 years old? Undoubtedly we have the power, but undoubtedly we would not do it. We have the power to prohibit the transportation through interstate commerce of any article. What did the Marigold case What did the Forty-three Gallons Whisky case say?

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do. I am coming to another case. Mr. CARMACK. I ask the Senator if the United States Government could put the young lady in the penitentiary for not being 18 years old? [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. Never! Goo God forbid! Protect the young ladies at all hazards.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. BACON. I should like to suggest to the Senator if there is anything in political history or in all the interstate commerce law to show that the object of that feature in the Constitution was not to facilitate commerce between the States and prevent any barrier. Yet the Senator would say that legitimately it can be construed to erect barriers which would absolutely de-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I say to the Senator and to the Senate in answer to that that not only has it been so construed ever since the first opinion was handed down on the subject by the Supreme Court, but that Congress has time and again accepted such a construction and done exactly that thing, and I propose to cite, before I get through this argument, law after law where there is absolute prohibition.

During the delivery of Mr. Beveringe's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Smoot in the chair.) The Senator from Indiana will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thank the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE resumed his speech. After having spoken until a few minutes before 5 o'clock,

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, he has now addressed the Senate for between four and five hours, and he must be tired. It is evident that this legal and constitutional argument can not well be finished to-night, and I inquire whether it would not suit the Senator to suspend and finish his argument in the morning, taking the floor immediately after the close of the routine morning business?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It would be very agreeable indeed to me, I will say to the Senator, if it can be arranged. I have only got started in this constitutional part.

Nr. NELSON. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Indiana may continue his argument to-morrow immediately after the close of the routine morning business.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has given notice that he will call up an appropriation bill in the morning, and I think some Senator has given notice of a speech to-morrow morning-the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER],

If I remember correctly.
Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter]. Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] has given notice of a speech to-morrow.

Mr. CARTER. I do not desire to overwork, or to be the means of overworking, the Senator from Indiana. I realize that he has continued many hours of the session to-day. Yet I trust that some hour may be fixed to-morrow for the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator-say at 2 o'clock.

Mr. PATTERSON. That depends upon how much time the Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can conclude, I am quite sure, by 2 o'clock to-morrow, without any interruptions.

means if he has a chance to proceed immediately after the close of the routine business?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly. That was the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose simply to ask if any unanimousconsent agreement had been asked with reference to 2 o'clock to-morrow'

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent was asked that the Senator from Indiana be allowed to resume the floor after the routine morning business to-morrow to conclude his remarks.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before I agree to that I wish to call attention to the fact that I have given notice that I should call up to-day Senate bill 6147, which is a very urgent bill. I yielded to the Senator from Indiana, and was pleased to do so. In the meantime the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] and the Sen ator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] gave notice that they would speak to-morrow, and, as we all know, memorial exercises are to be held on Friday.

I now rise, Mr. President, for the purpose of saying that on Saturday, after the routine morning business, if there be no appropriation bill under consideration, I will beg the indulgence of the Senate to consider the bill in which I am interested, and which ought to be taken up at an early day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator was extremely kind to me, and I wish to state my appreciation of his kindness

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota the acceptance of an amendment that the Senator from Indiana conclude his remarks by 2 o'clock.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say to the Senator that of course will try to do that, and certainly I shall not take much longer. The Senator can understand that if there are interruptions it would prolong the time.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to have the Senator conclude his remarks, of course. I suggest as a modification of the request for unanimous consent that immediately after the conclusion of the Senator's remarks, at whatever time he may conclude, the floor be accorded to me for some brief observations.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well. That is very courteous of the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I make the modification, and renew my request for unanimous consent in that form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Indiana be permitted to resume the floor immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow, for the purpose of concluding his remarks, and that the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] may take the floor immediately after the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Indiana for the purpose of addressing the Senate in accordance with the notice he has here-tofore given. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CHANGES IN DISTRICT STREET-RAILWAY TRACKS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to change the notice I gave. On Wednesday, after the routine morning business, I will ask to have considered the bill (S. 6147) authorizing changes in certain street-railway tracks within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

CONTINUATION OF POSTAL COMMISSION.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 230) continuing the Postal Commission until the close of the present session of Congress was read the first time by its title.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask that the joint resolution be put on its passage

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved. etc., That the Joint Commission of Congress appointed under the provisions of the act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, approved June 26, 1906, shall not be deemed to be discharged by the presentation to the Senate or the House of Representatives of its said report, but is hereby continued in existence with all the powers created by said act until the termination of the present session of Congress, for the purpose of completing the preparation, printing, and publication of the record of the hearings held by said Commission, and for the preparation, printing, and publication of an index and digest of the same. And the unexpended balance of the appropriation for said Commission in said act shall be available for the expenses of the said Commission. And that payments that have been made or are hereafter to be made on account of the expenses of the said Commission upon vouch-Senator from Indiana may be allowed for his argument. He ers approved by the chairman thereof shall be deemed held and taken and are hereby declared to be conclusive upon all departments and offi-cers of the Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BACON. I would inquire to what the joint resolution relates?

Mr. PENROSE. The purpose of the joint resolution is to enable the Postal Commission to complete the compiling of the testimony, which is very voluminous. It is the Joint Postal Commission of Congress, the report of which I submitted this morning.

Mr. BACON. That is what I rose to learn—the subject-matter to which it relates.

Mr. PENROSE. The fear was that the Commission with the presentation of its report to-day would go out of existence, and this is to continue it until the loose ends can be gathered in and the work completed.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and

LOWER COLORADO RIVER.

Mr. FLINT obtained the floor.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KEAN. I was going to move an executive session. Mr. FLINT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7776) to provide for protecting the interests of the United States on the lower Colorado River, for the establishment of the Imperial Valley and the Colorado River irrigation projects, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. FLINT. I will ask to have the matter go over. There does not seem to be a sufficient number of Senators here. a very important bill, and I want to have it carefully considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over.

REPRINT OF PURE-FOOD LAW.

Mr. HEYBURN. An order was made Saturday for a reprint of the pure-food law, with the accompanying documents. I ask that that order be rescinded and that an order be made for the printing of the matter included in the former order as a Senate document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order is changed as now requested.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 29, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

Monday, January 28, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D. The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to explain a statement I made on the day of the last session of the House. On page 1784 of the Record of January 26, during the debate on the agricultural appropriation bill, after the paragraph in relation to breeding animals was stricken out on the point of order made by the gentleman from New York, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Brooks] offered an amendment restoring that part of the paragraph relating to the appropriation to aid the State experimental station in carrying on this work, but leaving the amount to be appropriated at $50,000, as originally carried in To that I offered an amendment reducing the amount carried in the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado from $50,000 to $25,000. In explanation of my amendment I made the statement "and I am informed that it was understood among the members of the committee that if the proviso went out the amount should be reduced to $25,000, which is the current appropriation." The basis for that statement was remarks that were made here about me on the floor at that time concerning the matter; but I have since been informed by the chairman of the committee having in charge the agricultural appropriation bill that there was no agreement; there was no understanding whatever relative to the amount that was to be carried by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Brooks] in the event that the proviso went out, as stated by me, and that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Brooks] in offering the amendment as he did did not do so in violation of any agreement or any understanding whatever. I wish to exonerate him entirely from the implication in my re-The statement I made was incorrect and not justified I make this statement in justice to the gentleman by the fact. from Colorado.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the RECORD to be corrected?

Mr. TAWNEY. I just want to make that statement in explanation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express my thanks and appreciation to the gentleman from Minnesota for his very kind action in making the correction, and also to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] for his statement to the same effect.

POSTAL COMMISSION.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution:

The Clerk read as follows (H. J. Res. 230):

The Clerk read as follows (H. J. Res. 230):

Resolved, That the Joint Commission of Congress appointed under the provisions of the act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, approved June 26, 1906, shall not be deemed to be discharged by the presentation to the Senate or the House of Representatives of its said report, but is hereby continued in existence with all the powers created by said act until the termination of the present session of Congress for the purpose of completing the preparation, printing, and publication of the record of the hearings held by said Commission, and for the preparation, printing, and publication of an index and digest of the same. And the unexpended balance of the appropriation for said Commission in said act shall be available for the expenses of the said Commission. And that payments that have been made or are hereafter to be made on account of the expenses of the said Commission, upon vouchers approved by the chairman thereof, shall be deemed held and taken and are hereby declared to be conclusive upon all Departments and officers of the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield to me? Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I think this resolution ought to pass That Commission has not finished its work, because of any fault of its own, but because they have not had time. It appears to me to be a matter of very great importance in the economical administration of the Department; and I hope there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Overstreet of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

REPORT OF POSTAL COMMISSION.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana presented the report of the Postal Commission authorized by Congress to make inquiry regarding second-class mail matter; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7840. An act granting an increase of pension to Lewis A. Towne.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles

H. R. 24111. An act to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Potomac River, at or near Shepherdstown, W. Va.; H. R. 21402. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Gregg Shoals;

H. R. 24047. An act to authorize Chapter No. 376 of the Daughters of the American Revolution to erect a fountain on the property of the United States at Paducah, Ky.; and

H. R. 24104. An act transferring Phelps County to the eastern division of the eastern judicial district of Missouri.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7034) to incorporate the International Sunday School Association of America.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution No. 49.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 16944) to amend section 878 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that the Committee on the District of Columbia (this being District Day) seems to have a pretty large Calendar. The Chair trusts that the House may be in order during the consideration of this business.

CONDEMNATION OF LAND FOR STREETS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 23384) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, regulating proceedings for condemnation of land for streets."

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved April 30, 1906, and entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia,' regulating proceedings for condemnation of land for streets," be, and the same is hereby, amended by changing the section thereof designated section 491g so as to read:

"Sec. 491g. That of the amount found to be due and awarded as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said opening, extension, widening, or straightening, plus the costs and expenses of the proceeding, such amount shall be assessed by the jury as benefits, and to the extent of such benefits against the lots, pieces, or parcels of land on each side of the street, avenue, road, or highway to be opened, extended, widened, or straightened, and against any and all other lots, pieces, or parcels of land which the jury may find will be benefited by the opening, extension, widening, or straightening, as the jury may find said lots, pieces, or parcels of land will be benefited; and in oetermining the amounts to be assessed against said lots, pieces, or parcels of land the jury shall take into consideration the respective situations and topographical conditions of said lots, pieces, or parcels of land, and the benefits and advantages they may severally receive from the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of the street, avenue, road, or highway. And where part of any lot, piece, parcel, or tract of land has been dedicated for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of the street, avenue, road, or highway, the jury, in determining whether the remainder of said lot, piece, parcel, or tract is to be assessed for benefits, and the amount of benefits, if any, to be assessed thereon, shall also take into consideration the fact of such dedication and the value of the land so dedicated. If the total amount of the damages awarded by the jury and the costs and expenses of the proceeding be in excess of the total a

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentle-man in charge of this bill to explain that portion of it to be found beginning with line 15, page 2:

And where part of any lot, piece, parcel, or tract of land has been dedicated for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of the street, avenue, road, or highway, the jury, in determining whether the remainder of said lot, piece, parcel, or tract is to be assessed for benefits, and the amount of benefits, if any, to be assessed thereon, shall also take into consideration the fact of such dedication and the value of the land so dedicated.

What I want to know is this: Suppose that a dedication is made by A, and B, C, and D own other parcels. Now, it seems to me that under the provisions of this act the benefits resulting from A's dedication might be applied to the benefit of B. C.

Mr. OLCOTT. I disagree entirely with the gentleman from Iowa; but even if his construction of the amendment were right, the amendment merely directs the jury fixing the award and the benefits to take certain matters into consideration. It does not compel any change in action toward people who have dedicated property, but it does bring before the jury and make it imperative for them to have all of the facts before them when the matter is considered.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the language will justify another construction than that. I think I did not make myself plain to the gentleman. Here we will say are four parties whose lots or parcels of land will be affected by a particular street opening. Now, A grants to the public a portion of that. The others do not. Here is a provision, it seems to me, that the dedication of A, being a benefit, shall be considered in estimating the damages of the other parties, B, C, and D.

Mr. OLCOTT. It seems to me that is a very strained construction of that provision. It says that where property has been dedicated for the opening the value of the land so dedicated shall be taken into consideration. It seems to me it would be a remarkably strained construction to say that be-cause A dedicated some land that the value of some other land owned by B or C should be considered.

Mr. HEPBURN. That it should have the benefit of A's dedication.

Mr. OLCOTT. I do not think that could possibly be spelled out from this law. This is a matter which the corporation counsel has found to be a serious difficulty in condemnation proceedings. The amendment was prepared by the corporation counsel, and unquestionably the intention is that the dedication of A shall be considered in the awarding of benefits to A and not in the awarding of benefits to anybody else.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.
The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

FREE LECTURES.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 24746) for free lectures. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of education of the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, authorized to maintain a course or series of free evening lectures.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.
Mr. MADDEN. I wish to say in connection with this proposal to enact a law to establish a bureau of free lectures within the District of Columbia that the Committee on Appropriations have looked carefully into the proposition, and after the most thorough investigation decided that it was an expenditure of money that ought not to be made. It has been made from time to time in the past, but the amount of good accomplished by the expenditure was not such, in the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations, as to warrant its continuance. A few days ago, while the Committee of the Whole House was considering the District of Columbia appropriation bill, an item of this kind was sought to be introduced into that bill by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Olcott], the author of this bill. The House at that time refused to adopt the amendment.

Mr. OLCOTT. If the gentleman will yield a moment— Mr. MADDEN. Yes. Mr. OLCOTT. The House refused to adopt the amendment because the chairman of the subcommittee on appropriations, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], who had the bill in charge; raised against it a point of order, and it went out on that point.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, it was refused, at any rate, and the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations was and is that this expenditure should not be saddled upon the District. believe this bill should not pass at this time, and I hope it will

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman his reasons for opposing the appropriation.

Mr. MADDEN. The reason the Committee on Appropriations opposed the appropriation was that it was simply the creation of a place to give employment to somebody, not because there was any desire on the part of anybody in the District to accomplish good for the District further than the good that might be accomplished by finding a place for somebody.

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to ask the gentleman a further question, as to whether he objects to the character of the lectures or the fact that free lectures should be given?

Mr. MADDEN. I object to the continuation of the lectures, for I believe that the public school system ought not to be saddled with expense of this character. The public education of the children of the District never contemplated the establishment of a lecture bureau outside of the schools. penditure is taken from the public moneys collected for educational purposes, intended to be expended through the public The money heretofore has been spent for purposes not recognized by the school law.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman another question. Does he know the number of those who attended these lectures during any one fiscal year?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I do not recollect now the number, but we have the number in the record of the hearings.

Mr. MORRELL. As far as I can remember, it amounted to over 20,000 people who were benefited by this small expenditure called for in this bill. This is practically on the same lines, as I understand it, as the university extension. This bill as drafted, as I have read it and as it passed the committee, does not specify that the entire salary shall be given to any one particular individual, but that it should be applied for the purpose of free lectures. It does not, in other words, create any place.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden] I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Morrell] a question.

Who were these people that attended these lectures, school

Mr. MORRELL. As far as I know there were a certain number of adults as well as school children.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Which predominated?

Mr. MORRELL. That I am unable to say. Mr. MADDEN. These lectures are not intended for school children at all; they are intended for adults, and the adults under the school laws ought to be obliged to pay and are obliged to pay for their own education.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly; I yield. Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if this bill is passed, in my judgment, it should be amended in a very important respect. It should be amended so as to require these lectures to be delivered in the public school buildings. There have been in the past in the District of Columbia lectures given under an appropriation for free lectures

Mr. OLCOTT. We will be perfectly willing to accept an amendment of that kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will suggest it when I am finished. As I was saying, there have been in the past free lectures given under an appropriation for free lectures which were supposed to be for the benefit of persons whose early education had been neglected. It was in pursuance of a scheme of university extension that had been adopted with great success in other of the large cities of the country. The Committee on Appropriations when it undertook the investigation of this question in this session discovered this fact, that all of these lectures had been delivered at the Carnegie Library. The surroundings there are of such a character that the persons for whose benefit the lectures were originally intended felt out of place, and as a matter of fact those for whose benefit the lectures were intended never attended the lectures at all.

For persons whose early education has been neglected and for whose benefit this course of lectures was arranged there were lectures delivered during the past year upon such interesting and elevating subjects for such persons as "Spanish architecture," "Tone and tone-producing qualities," and subjects of a similar character that would be a similar character that we would be a similar to the similar character that we would be a similar character that we would be a similar to the similar character that we would be a similar to the similar character than the similar character that we would be a similar to the similar than the similar tha similar character that would be of peculiar advantage to persons whose early education has been neglected. There has been continued strife over this course of free lectures. One faction desired that the school-teachers be compelled to attend and that the lectures be restricted to the school-teachers. Another faction has contended that they should be given for the benefit of those whose early education has been neglected and that the subjects should be adapted for such purposes. The result has been, however, that the purpose of the appropriation has been entirely diverted, and lectures have not been given either on the subjects or in the places where they could be of benefit to these people. If a series of free evening lectures is to be instituted and given in the public schools in the District in those localities where the residents will not feel that they are out of place in attending them, with the subjects chosen such that they will be of some advantage to them, then there might be some justification for appropriations for this purpose; but to continue the practice now in vogue of conducting a series of free lectures at the Carnegie Library for a restrictive class of persons, for persons who are not in need of this character of instruction, and to select subjects that are far beyond the comprehension of persons whose early education has been neglected, makes it, to my mind, an utterly unjustifiable expense. With the permission of the committee, I desire to offer an amendment-

Mr. OLCOTT. I would like to ask whether the gentleman from New York will be satisfied if we add, "Provided, That such lectures shall be held in some public school building in the District." We will be very glad to accept such an amendment as that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that would improve the bill immensely, and perhaps result in the selection of a class of sub-jects that would be of benefit to those for whom they are intended.

Mr. OLCOTT. Well, I suppose that matter should be left to the board of education.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been left to the board of education, and the result has been that all the lectures have been given at the Carnegie Library, where persons for whose benefit they were supposed to be held felt some delicacy about attending.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman inform the House what is the cost of these lectures?

Mr. OLCOTT. Fifteen hundred dollars a year. Mr. JAMES. For how many lectures?

Mr. OLCOTT. We had lectures lasting twenty-six weeks, and three or four a week.

Mr. JAMES. Upon what subjects are they-educational topics?

Mr. OLCOTT. They were upon general subjects; I can not give the complete list, but they were subjects of general practical interest to the people here. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman a

Mr. OLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman who selects these lecturers?

Mr. OLCOTT. They are selected by the board of education of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is a lecturer selected by the board of education to serve for a year?

Mr. OLCOTT. There are a number of lecturers. There is no specific lecturer, but the board of education obtain the services of several to deliver lectures upon different subjects at different times and different places.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much do they pay for the lecturers?

Mr. OLCOTT. I can not tell you. All I know is the total expense the board of education asked for was $1,500 a year.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then is this designed for the benefit of the students in the city schools that are under the age permitted to go to school, or is it designed for the general

It is designed, of course, for the general public, but that includes the large number of children who can, under the laws of the District of Columbia, perform some work during the day and who do attend these lectures and who go there to get some of the education that they are deprived of by reason of their financial condition.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then let me ask the gentleman if he thinks this Government should endeavor to go beyond the free-school age and educate any person under 80 years of age?

Is that the intention of this bill?

Mr. OLCOTT. I think the District of Columbia or the city of Washington can well follow the example of some of the great communities, especially the one I know most about-New York City—that has a most extensive series of lectures of the same character delivered in the public schools in the same way that we seek to have delivered here in the District.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the city of Washington or any city in the United States desires to instruct adult citizens, why should they not put up the money themselves and control it? Why should the General Government or a State government undertake to educate the adult citizens of any State or com-

Mr. OLCOTT. These are paid in the same manner that all appropriations for the city of Washington and District of Co-lumbia are made. Half of it comes out of the District of Columbia treasury and half of it comes out of this Government. I think the gentleman's objection is rather to the method by which the District is financed. It is the city of Washington that is paying for these lectures.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. When a man becomes old the Government loses jurisdiction over him, and it is no longer the duty of any government to educate an adult citizen. to educate the children of any city, State, or county, but we should not undertake to educate the adults of any city, State, or county.

Mr. OLCOTT. I do not think the gentleman would wish to be put in a position of declining to allow adults to go into these schools, when they are citizens here, and listening to the lectures

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would be in favor of maintaining the law for the child, but not for the adult, of any State or city.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with this bill probably because I have not had the educational advantages that my friend from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] has. He is a college graduate. My course in public schools, or any incorporated schools, for that matter, comprised five months, and for the rest of my education I have had to depend on my own efforts and those of my mother and other members of the family. Therefore I sympathize with men and women who have arrived at mature years and who have not had the advantages that such men as my distinguished and very dear I think we ought to be ashamed of ourselves to hesitate over the expenditure of so small a sum as $1,500 for the benefit of the laboring people and their wives and all those who have not had educational advantages

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Is he quite certain that we are giving these for the benefit of the laboring people and those who have not had college opportunities?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I will say in answer to the gentleman that only last year I attended a meeting of the Central Labor Union of this city, at which this very provision was advocated for this very purpose, of giving laboring people and their wives and families the chance of obtaining this education. I do not vouch for the board of education, and I do not know whether they are fully performing their duty. They seem to be reversed in the courts with some degree of frequency, but the principle is all right, and if it is not being carried out according to its purpose and intent, then let us make the board of education carry it out that way.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman believe that this bill will compel the board of education to carry it out along the line of his thought?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I do not see why not. An amendment, I understand, is to be accepted by my colleague requiring these lectures to be given in a school building.

Mr. MADDEN. Heretofore the lectures have been given in the Carnegie Library building, amid gilt surroundings, where no one but aristocrats could attend the lectures.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is going to be changed. Mr. MADDEN. The lectures were upon subjects that only can be understood by those who have had a classical education. Mr. BENNET of New York. That probably was an error.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not understand that the object of the gentleman from New York is to appropriate money to educate further along in classics those who have already been educated in that line.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, no; I think it ought to be for the class of people who have not had the early advantages of education and those who have had just enough to give them a hunger for more; and they ought to have a chance to obtain it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman make it so that it shall only be for this class of people?

Mr. BENNET of New York. You can not do that, of course, because once you give a public lecture you have got to let all in. Mr. JAMES. Would you be willing to extend these free lectures to the various cities throughout the United States?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Of course we have no jurisdic-

Mr. JAMES. We have just as much right, I will say to the gentleman from New York, to appropriate for free lectures in Kentucky or Texas as we have in the District of Columbia. Mr. BENNET of New York. I will let my friend from California answer.

Mr. JAMES. This makes an extra tax on the whole of the people of the various States of this Union, and why should you lay it on the whole of the people for the benefit of these people here in the city of Washington while the whole people pay more taxes than they do?

Mr. KAHN. In answer to the gentleman from Kentucky I will say that in California all the university professors go all over the State and give these free lectures, and they are very largely attended.

Mr. JAMES. And the people of California pay for it?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

But the General Government would pay for this. Mr. JAMES. Mr. KAHN. The General Government has jurisdiction in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JAMES. I believe that if the people of the District want this they ought to pay for it, and they ought not to ask the other people of the country to pay for it.

Mr. KAHN. They do pay half.
Mr. JAMES. But not all.
Mr. BENNET of New York. That same criticism would of course apply to any appropriation for the schools. If you take the gentleman's view, the people of his State or my State are paying pro rata in the same way.

Mr. JAMES. You say that the laboring people want this appropriation?

Mr. BENNET of New York. They do.

Mr. JAMES. Have they petitioned for it?
Mr. BENNET of New York. They did last year.

Mr. JAMES. As I understand the wishes of the laboring people they are asking and begging for other legislation here before this House which they can not even get upon this floor for consideration that is of a great deal more benefit to them than this pitiful sum of $1,500.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That could be said possibly of any bill that is considered by the House.

from New York know that the whole of this $1,500 will be absorbed as compensation to pay lecturers?

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is the way it ought to be, when furnished with the school buildings.

Mr. MADDEN. We have not the school buildings.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It is proposed now

Mr. MADDEN. But we never had that up to now.
Mr. BENNET of New York. I am not talking about the past, but the present and the future. I look to the time when, with the school buildings, the whole $1,500 will be absorbed for lectures, and there will be no expense outside of light and heat or any other legitimate expense.

Now, every large city, I think, in the United States has these free lectures. We are charged with responsibility for the city of Washington, one of the largest in the whole United States, and I thoroughly agree with what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] said the other day, that it is our duty to make this city a model city, and we can not justify ourselves to our own consciences in refraining from doing it for the city of Washington when other cities, almost without exception, have adopted this plan as a part of their educational system. Why, in the Borough of Brooklyn, from which my friend Mr. Fitz-GERALD comes, last year there were 358,818 people who attended lectures in that borough alone—free public lectures. I have pictures of the crowded halls in that borough, showing that the houses were filled with the kind of people to whom lectures like that ought to be given. I hope the House will not be niggardly and will not be mean about a little matter of $1,500, but will gladly join in aiding the educational system of the District of Columbia in every respect, and putting it in every regard on as high a plane as that of any other large city. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the amendment ought to be reported.

Mr. SIMS. I desire to have something to say on this bill before debate closes.

The SPEAKER. But an amendment has been offered and accepted which has not been reported.

Mr. OLCOTT. I will offer on behalf of the committee the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the bill "Provided, That said lectures shall be held in some public school building."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have permission from the gentleman to add, and to be considered as part of that amendment, the words:

Provided, That the expense thereof shall be paid entirely from the revenues of the District of Columbia as appropriated from time to time by Congress

Will you accept that as an amendment to your amendment?

Mr. OLCOTT. I will not accept it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words about the Mr. OLCOTT. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. SIMS. I wish ten minutes.

Mr. OLCOTT.

I yield to the gentleman ten minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, when the bill was brought up for consideration before the committee I was informed, or understood, that this proposition was in the appropriation bill and went out on a point of order made against the Appropriations Committee, and on this account I offered no resistance to the report of the bill. I have learned since that this is not a fact, but that the amendment was offered to the appropriation bill and went out on a point of order made by members of the Appropriations Committee. Having supported the bill under a misapprehension, I do not feel bound to support it here.

As to the nature of the lectures that have heretofore been given under the appropriation previously made, I think my friend from New York [Mr. Bennet] can learn whether or not they are suitable for gentlemen who had no early opportunities, like the gentleman and myself, and whether or not they are the kind of lectures that are demanded by the laboring people. For instance, take those delivered in 1905. The first one was by H. W. Wiley, Ph. D.; subject, "Feeding preservative to young men." How much did my friend from New York lose by not having been taught that in his early youth? How much will the children of the District of Columbia lose if they do not go to hear such a lecture as that?

What else? Here was another, by Mr. Henry Oldys; subject, "Bird notes." How much did my friend from New York [Mr. Benner] lose by not having studied that in his early youth? How much do the laboring people lose by not knowing all about bird notes? I learned a great deal about bird notes by mixing Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of fact, does not the gentleman with the birds when I had hold of the plow handles; but I have never seen a laboring man who worked for a living who cared how those bird notes were made, just so he had the birds and [Laughter.] the notes.

Now, in my laboring days I lost a great deal by not having studied Spanish architecture, which was the subject of a lecture by Mr. George O. Totten, jr. How many of our laboring ture by Mr. George O. Totten, jr. How many of our people are engaged in the study of Spanish architecture? Anpeople are engaged in the study of Spanish architecture? How much did my friend from New York lose in not knowing how to go around the world in forty minutes? See what stingy and parsimonious gentlemen the members of the Appropriations Committee are in trying to deprive us laboring people of knowing how to go around the world in forty minutes. Gentlemen, you are niggardly.

Here is another one by Rev. U. G. B. Pierce, subject "A night in the nether world." Oh, my laboring friends, how you are denied opportunities to know about nights in the nether world. You can learn all about nights in the sweatshops, and some of those sweatshops are not very far from where the gentleman from New York lives. Now my friend wants to teach them about the nether world.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Only on one point. I did not want to interrupt the flow of your eloquence or your bird notes.

Mr. SIMS. I did not know it was flowing.
Mr. BENNET of New York. But as to the sweatshops in New York City I want to say what the gentleman refers to would have been true three years ago, but that 95 per cent of the sweatshops in New York City have ceased to exist since

Mr. SIMS. I am glad to hear that; but what about the nether world? Is there anything going on in New York to enlighten people about that? [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I will say that the gentleman from Tennessee and other people who do not live in New York, when they come there learn a great deal more about the nether world in New York City than we who live there all the time know about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. It is the only opportunity we have to know anything about it, when we go to New York, while you people who live there in the nether world do not have to go out to learn

Now, I call your attention to another lecture delivered by Rev. John Van Schaick, jr., subject "Yacation days in Scotland." How cruel it is to deny our laboring people of the opportunity to hear about vacation days in Scotland. It is true we have a few vacation days here, called "holidays;" so many of them that there is hardly time to educate the children on account of the holidays, holy weeks, and holy months. Of course you want to tax your constituents and mine to let the laboring people of the District of Columbia know about vacation days in Scotland. Take this entire list of subjects from one end to the other and I could beat any man in my district who would run for office and claim to be a laboring man who would favor the expenditure of money for such purposes as this. One-half of this comes from the people of your State and mine, where they learn the bird notes from their own birds and at their own expense, and I think the amendment is a just one. If the people of the District of Columbia and the laboring people here want these lectures, let them pay for them, because we in our country do not need to know anything about nights in the nether world, about Spanish architecture, about bird notes, about vacation days in Scotland, about how to go around the world in forty minutes, or anything else covered by these lectures here. [Applause and laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. James) there were—ayes 81, noes 63.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. OLCOTT and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas were appointed tellers. The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72,

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 104, answering "present" 12, not voting 153, as follows:

  The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the opening of Mills avenue NE. from Rhode Island avenue to Twenty-fourth street.'
  - INCORPORATION OF BANKS WITHIN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.
- Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21669) to provide for the incorporation of banks within the District of Columbia.
  - The Clerk read as follows:
- The Clerk read as follows:

  Be it enacted, etc., That associations for carrying on the business of banking within the District of Columbia may be formed by any number of natural persons, not less in any case than five, by entering into articles of association and executing an organization certificate in the same manner and to the same extent as prescribed by sections 5133, 5134, and 5135 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the organization of national banks. Upon duly making and filing articles of association and an organization certificate with the Comptroller of the Currency in the manner provided by the foregoing sections, the association shall become, as from the date of the execution of its organization certificate, a body corporate, and as such it shall have power to do a general banking business within the District of Columbia, when authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency, in the manner provided by section 5169 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, but no association shall be organized under this act with a less capital than $100,000, divided into shares of $100 each. Such capital shall be paid in cash in the manner prescribed by sections 5140 and 5141 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the shareholders shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not for one another, for all contracts, debts, and angagements of such association to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares, and such liability may be enforced by the Comptroller of the Currency in the manner provided by the national banking laws.

amount invested in such shares, and such liability may be enforced by the Comptroller of the Currency in the manner provided by the national banking laws.

Sec. 2. That any savings bank, or savings company, or trust company, or other banking institution organized under authority of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901, as amended by the acts approved January 31 and June 30, 1902, or organized by virtue of the laws of any of the States of this Union, and having an office or banking house located within the District of Columbia where deposits or savings are received, may become a banking association under this act in the manner provided by section 5154 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the conversion of State banks into national associations.

Sec. 3. That from and after the 1st day of ——, anno Domini 1907, no person, company, association, copartnership, or corporation, except associations organized under the national-bank act, corporations organized under an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other corporations within the District of Columbia," approved October 1, 1890, and corporations organized under this act, shall transact a banking business, or maintain an office or banking house where deposits or savings are received, within the District of Columbia. Any person, and any officer or agent of any company, firm, or corporation who shall wilfully violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemenor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not longer than two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 4. That section 5209 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for the punishment of offenses against the national banking laws, shall apply to organizations formed or converted under this act.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 3, strike out all, commencing with the word "that," in line 5, down to and including the word "Columbia," in line 15, and insert in Heu thereof the following:

"That from and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1908, no person, company, association, copartnership, or corporation shall transact a banking business or maintain an office or banking house where deposits or savings are received, within the District of Columbia, except associations organized under the national-bank act, corporations organized under an act of Congress entitled 'An act to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other corporations within the District of Columbia, approved October 1, 1890, except also any person, firm, or company regularly licensed to engage in the business of private banking in the District of Columbia prior to the 1st day of January, 1906, and corporations organized under this act."

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to have some explanation as to what the changes are and what the objects are.

Mr. OLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mannl and others.

Mr. MANN. The "gentleman from Illinois" is seeking information.

Mr. OLCOTT. I will be very glad to give the gentleman all the information that I can. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that was introduced to correct the abuses that have grown up in the District of Columbia by reason of certain banking corporations being rather loosely governed. The bill was supported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kline], who is unavoidably absent, and I have been asked to report the bill. The amendment that is suggested provides the same care in allowing incorporations of banking institutions here as is made necessary by the national banking act. It necessitates a fully paid-in capital of $100,000, with the same stock liability on these banks that may hereafter be organized in the District of Columbia as is required now under the national banking act.

Mr. MANN. In an incorporation what is the present limit as

Mr. OLCOTT. I can not tell what the present limit is. I think it may be in the report, but if you will allow me just one moment, I will say that the bill has been entirely approved by the Comptroller of the Currency and makes these new banks to be established directly responsible to the Comptroller, and brings them under the general supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency in the same manner that the national banks are, and makes the stockholders liable in the same way for the par value of their stock.

Mr. MANN. Of course no one, I think, will object to that, but is there nothing else in the bill?

Mr. OLCOTT. There is nothing else in the bill. The bill was introduced by and had the sanction of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLINE], who is the member of the committee most conversant with banking matters, and is in the line of safe and conservative banking, and to prevent what we might call "wild-cat" banking concerns, which have frequently existed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain what the present requirements are for the granting of licenses to private bankers? I notice in the bill that there is an amendment which excepts from the operation of this act those doing a private banking business who have received a license prior to the 1st day of January, 1906. I would like to have the gentleman explain the regulations which are in force under the present method, and what the reason is for making this exception.

Mr. OLCOTT. Exception was made because it was conclusively shown to the committee, and especially to the subcommittee which had this matter in charge, that there were four private banking institutions which would be affected by this who had received heretofore, under the general law, licenses and whose credit was of such high standing that it seemed unfair to them to change their method of business in any way whatever.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will not this bill by forbidding licenses in the future to private bankers give these four a monopoly and a great and undue advantage over all other persons who will be hereafter required to do a banking business under the provisions in this bill?

Mr. OLCOTT. I am quite certain that will not obtain, because these licenses compel the proper report to the Comptroller and. I believe, are hedged around by every possible safety.

Mr. STAFFORD. What objection could be advanced by these private bankers to being compelled to incorporate and operate under the general provisions of this proposed law as originally intended? It is certainly giving four or five private bankers an undue advantage over others simply because they have been established heretofore.

Mr. OLCOTT. Because they have been established and have been doing such an entirely conservative, proper, and substantial banking business for so many years it would seem as if injustice would be done them-

Mr. STAFFORD. But you are denying that privilege to all others who might seek that privilege hereafter, and you are giving these four bankers a decided advantage by permitting them to continue. What objection could be made, if the committee thought it advisable, to have all persons doing a banking business incorporate under the general provisions and report as required in this bill?

Mr. OLCOTT. I think that one of these particular banks that was most recently established was established in 1856.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are many instances of private banks who subsequently incorporated, and I would like to have the gentleman advance some reason or state what hardship would be entailed to provide that these bankers should incorporate under the provisions of this bill, rather than giving them a special privilege.

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, I can say to the gentleman that there are four or five institutions here that are bankers and brokers. They have a name that is their capital and credit—their reputation. They appeared before the committee, appeared before the Commissioners, and also before the Comptroller of the Currency, and the bill was amended at the suggestion and by the consent of the Comptroller and the Commissioners to omit these three or four old-established concerns.

Mr. STAFFORD. What privilege would these private bankers have which they would not have if they were incorporated under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. They have no privileges, except they have an old name which is a part of their capital.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Riggs National Bank formerly did business as private bankers under the name of Riggs & Co., and subsequently were incorporated. What reason can the gentleman give why these establishments should be given this special privilege?

Mr. OLCOTT. I think I can answer the gentleman by reading from the second page of the report:

The amendment which your committee recommends, exempting the regularly licensed private banks, was recommended by the Commissioners after the bill had been introduced. Your committee is informed that this provision will result in exempting from the provisions of the act four copartnerships which have been doing business in the District, one since 1856, and the youngest since 1890. These firms do not conduct a general banking business, do not receive savings deposits, the chief element of their business being for the convenience of their patrons for whom they make investments.

Mr. STAFFORD. But what hardship would it entail upon these private bankers if they were required to be incorporated? Mr. OLCOTT. The Comptroller of the Currency has also specially sanctioned this amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the Comptroller, in this language, says that it might be a convenience, in effect, to these private bankers if they be allowed to continue the private banking privilege; but you do not advance any reason why they should not be required to incorporate under the general law.

Mr. BABCOCK. Why, Mr. Speaker, these concerns are all doing principally a brokerage business. They call themselves bankers and brokers

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, if they are incorporated they would have to abandon their business as brokers; and if this law went into effect they could not receive the deposits of their customers.

It would practically drive them out of business.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there are a great many other brokers who would be permitted to continue.

Mr. BABCOCK. There are only four of these concerns.

Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a ques-Mr. MANN.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that these are stock brokers? Mr. BABCOCK. They are brokers and investment houses, not doing a banking business; but that is all they can do under the provisions of this law.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, they are ordinary stock brokers. Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And they receive money on deposit so as to have the money there with which to make purchases or have money on deposit which they realize from purchases or sales?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, then, does the gentleman mean that this bill is to prohibit anybody else engaging in the broker business in the District of Columbia, except these four concerns now engaged in business?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Would not that be the effect?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no; but they are given the right to use the name of bank; that is all.

Mr. MANN. But that is not what the bill says at all. Mr. OLCOTT. That is exactly what it does. Mr. BABCOCK. That is exactly the proposition. That is exactly the proposition. We have had the same situation in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. OLCOTT. And in New York.
Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I thought the gentleman was mistaken. This bill says: "No person shall gentieman was mistaken. This bill says: "No person shall transact a banking business or maintain a business or banking house where deposits are received." So that under this bill "no person," "no partnership," "no concern" of any kind can hold an office or receive deposits of money, which means that no new brokerage house can be established in Washington. This bill would be purely in the interest, but not intentionally, of those four brokerage concerns now in Washington, and no new concern could be established. I do not know their names and do not do any business with them. do any business with them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would not that result in establishing a monopoly in the brokerage business in the four concerns that are now engaged in it?

Mr. BABCOCK. No.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not?
Mr. BABCOCK. There are 50 other brokers here, and it would not have that effect at all.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's claim was that it was absolutely necessary, in order to conduct a brokerage business, that the brokers should be entitled to receive deposits, or to retain deposits after moneys had been realized.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman well knows that if he gives a broker an order to buy a thousand dollars' worth of bonds, when he gives his order he has to make a deposit of either the whole or a part of what is to be paid for the bonds. That is the business of a broker; but these brokers can not do a banker's business—the receiving of deposits of money for safe-keeping or anything of that kind.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not confine the bill to the banking business. This bill says:

No person, company, association, partnership, or corporation shall transact a banking business or maintain an office where deposits are received.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois, could not these four brokerage firms incorporate as a bank and retain their names and then separate their banking and brokerage business, and go on?

Mr. MANN. Of course; that is undoubtedly correct. I have no expression of opinion to make as to whether these brokers should be required to incorporate or not, but I do not see the object of passing a law which turns over all the brokerage business to four concerns, whoever they may be. I do not know the names of them, and I do not know whom they are.

Mr. OLCOTT. These four particular concerns are the only ones that do a banking business along with a brokerage business. It is not going to affect the other brokers

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman proposes to give them a monopoly.

Mr. OLCOTT. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. OLCOTT. Of the brokerage business-not in the slightest degree. We propose to allow them to continue the business they now carry on, which has the sanction of the Comptroller of the Currency, who has looked after it with a great deal of care.

Mr. MANN. The business of the Comptroller of the Currency is only to look at it from the banking standpoint.

Mr. OLCOTT. I presume he has.

Mr. MANN. But you go away beyond the banking provision. You provide that nobody shall maintain an office where deposits are received.

Mr. OLCOTT. We do not go beyond anything that the Comptroller of the Currency has approved.

Mr. MANN. I say the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency on such a proposition is valueless. That is not the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency. He does not interest himself on that point. The Comptroller of the Currency con-fines his recommendation to those matters that come within the jurisdiction of his office, and that is only the matter of banking. You go away beyond that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the committee consider that a broker should not be permitted to do a banking business?

Mr. OLCOTT. It considers, and the bill provides, that a broker shall not do business as a banker and use the words "banker" or "banking house."

Mr. SHERLEY. Did the committee think it fair that these four firms should be excluded from what they considered to be a salutary rule?

Mr. OLCOTT. The four concerns referred to have been required to obtain banking licenses, and have obtained them. Brokers are not required to obtain banking licenses. mittee considered that those who prior to 1800 obtained these licenses should not have their licenses revoked by the operation of this bill. They are the only four people concerned, because they are the only people who have obtained licenses.

Mr. SHERLEY. That makes it all the worse. If I understand the contention of the committee aright, it is this: You propose to divorce the brokerage business from the banking business. Is that true?

Mr. OLCOTT. Yes; to the extent of using the words "banking house" or "banker."

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, although you think that is salutary, yet because there happened to be four men who do now combine the two businesses, they are to be excepted from the operation of this bill.

Mr. OLCOTT. We are allowing the people who have already received bankers' licenses from the Comptroller of the Currency to go on and act under those licenses, and not take them away from them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman consider that it becomes right to have the brokerage and banking business united because it has so existed with the gentleman, but wrong for those who have not heretofore united the two pursuits? Mr. OLCOTT. "The gentleman" does not consider that at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then what equity exists because these men have been doing something which you now, as a committee, declare is not a proper thing to be done, to wit, the joining of a banking and brokerage business?

Mr. OLCOTT. "The gentleman" does believe that when a license has been given by the United States of America, through its Comptroller of the Currency, these people should not easily be divested of their vested rights.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman thinks, then, that if a wrong has been done, having been done, it should be a continuing wrong?

Mr. OLCOTT. I do not think that is a fair conclusion to be reached. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. OLCOTT) there were—ayes 27, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, before that question is taken I think I ought to say that I do not think the bill is in such shape, without the committee amendment, as will meet the approval of the House. I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to withdraw the bill at this time.

Mr. BABCOCK. And I would ask that it be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, it will be so ordered. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, what is the request? It was impossible to hear the Chair state the request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request was that the bill be withdrawn and be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the Chair will state that there seemed to the Chair to be no objection,

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move that the bill do lie upon the table, if I have an opportunity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. PAYNE. Would it be in order now to move to recommit the bill to the committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair put it as a request for unanimous consent, but a motion of the kind made by the gentleman from Wisconsin would be in order, if he desires to make that motion.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, then I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERLEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it. Mr. SHERLEY. Would a motion that the bill do lie upon

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the motion to lay upon the table is not debatable, if that point be made.

Mr. BABCOCK. I wish to make a statement with reference to the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to a statement being made by the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause. 1 The Chair hears none.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes originally from the Comptroller of the Currency through the Commissioners and contains very many important features. I think it would be unfortunate and a mistake to lay the bill on the table. Whether the committee can re-report it in such form as will meet the approval of the House I can not say at this time, but I certainly think it will be an error to lay it on the table, and I hope that will not be done.

PROTECTION OF PROPERTY IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. *

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 23941) to amend section 14 of the act approved July 29, 1892, entitled "An act for the preservation of the public peace and the protection of property within the District of Columbia," which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 of the act approved July 29, 1892, entitled "An act for the preservation of the public peace and the protection of property within the District of Columbia," be amended by inserting after the phrase "between the setting and rising of the sun" the following: "And no person shall kindle or set on fire, or be present, aiding, consenting, or causing such to be done, in any front or rear yard or inclosed ground or lot at any time, within 200 feet of any premises, stable, shed, or other building, or inflammable structure or property, any box, barrel, refuse, straw, shavings, or other combustible;" so that the said section shall read as follows:

"Sec. 14. That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons within the limits of the District of Columbia to kindle or set on fire, or be present, aiding, consenting, or causing it to be done, in any street, avenue, road, or highway, alley, open ground, or lot, any box, barrel, straw, shavings, or other combustible, between the setting and rising of the sun, and no person shall kindle or set on fire, or be present, aiding, consenting, or causing such to be done, in any front or rear yard or inclosed ground or lot at any time, within 200 feet of any premises, stable, shed, or other building, or inflammable structure or property, any box, barrel, refuse, straw, shavings, or other combustible; and any person offending against the provisions of this act shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding $10 for each and every offense."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RECOPYING OLD RECORDS IN OFFICE OF RECORDER OF DEEDS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 22350, to authorize the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia to recopy old records in his office, and for other purposes, and which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to recopy such of the records in his office as may, in his judgment and that of the supreme court of said District, or one of its justices appointed by it for that purpose, need recopying in order to preserve the originals from destruction: Provided, That the expense thereof shall not in any one fiscal year exceed the sum of $1,000, at a rate of compensation not exceeding that now authorized, certified to by the said supreme court, or by one of its justices appointed by it for that purpose, and audited and allowed by the proper accounting officer of the Treasury.

Sec. 2. That section 553 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia be so amended as to give authority to the recorder of deeds of the said District to appoint a cashier for his office and pay said cashier a salary not exceeding —— dollars per annum, to be certified to and audited and allowed as now provided.

With the following committee amendment:

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of section 2.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some information about this bill. It seems to me that there is something extraordinary in some of its sections. Why should the copying of all of the records in that office be left to the sole discretion of the clerk? Why should he have authority to determine how much of the records in the office shall be copied?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it seems that a large number of the records in the office of the recorder of deeds are very, very old. Some of them are as old as a hundred and twelve years

Mr. GILBERT. I am not speaking of that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. If you will let me proceed, I will explain the purpose of this bill. That is what you asked about. The records have become very much mutilated and in some cases are in very bad shape. The object of the bill is to provide for their recopying and is restricted to $1,000 a year expenditure, so that there shall be a gradual renewing and bringing up of these old and worn-out records in order to preserve them without any danger of clouding the titles to property in this District. It does not provide for the expenditure of any large sum of money at one time, but the bill provides that not to exceed $1,000 a year shall be spent, not out of the Public Treasury, but out of the revenues of the office which are in excess of the expenses, and thereby gradually bring these records to a state of perfection and in that way preserve the papers and render the danger of loss or mutilation nil.

Mr. GILBERT. My question was directed to an entirely different proposition, and that was, conceding the records were old and mutilated, it occurred to me it would not be proper to delegate to the clerk the sole power to determine whether those records were mutilated so as to require their copying or not. He himself, deriving a revenue from the copying, would of course proceed to spend the thousand dollars a year for that purpose, whereas if the secretary or some other—

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That is exactly what the bill provides, if the gentleman will read, that the judgment as to what records shall be restored lies with the justices of the supreme court of the District, and they direct him how to expend not to exceed $1,000 a year.

Mr. GILBERT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I have improperly obtruded myself in this discussion. I did not hear that feature of the bill read at the outset.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That is in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REGISTERED NURSES.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12690) to define the term of "registered nurse" and to provide for the registration of nurses in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12090) to define the term of "registered nurse" and to provide for the registration of nurses in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

VETERINARY SURGEONS.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 5698) to regulate the practice of veterinary medicine in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

days immediately following the passage of this set no person shall, it to be a registered unrest, or allow neveral to be required to be a registered to the control of the registered to the registered board to practice veterinary medicine in the District of Columbia without examination. Any person, not a graduate of a college lawfully authorized to confer a degree in veterinary medicine, who has been continuously engaged in the practice of veterinary medicine in the District of Columbia for five years previous to the passage of this act and has maintained an office in said District for that purpose shall be permitted to present himself for examination before the board of veterinary examiners without fee, and upon proof of satisfactory knowledge of veterinary medicine shall be registered and licensed as a practitioner of veterinary medicine shall be registered and licensed as a practitioner of veterinary medicine and having been refused a license as the result of such examination may, within thirty days after formal notification of such refusal, appeal from the decision of said board. Such appeal must be in writing, addressed to the Commissioners of said District, setting forth the ground upon which it is based, and accompanied by a deposit of $30. If, after examination of said appeal, said Commissioners deem it proper, they shall appoint a board of review, consisting of three practitioners of veterinary medicine having qualifications similar to those required of members of the regular board of examiners in veterinary medicine, which board shall review the examination of appellant, and if they deem necessary reexamine him and report their finding to said Commissioners; and such finding shall be final and binding upon all parties concerned, and if favorable to the appellant the board of examiners in veterinary medicine shall issue to him a license to practice veterinary medicine in said District. Each member of said board of review shall be paid a fee of not more than $10 for each candidate examined, payment to be made from the deposit of the appellant.

Sec. 7. That every person practicing veterinary medicine in the District of Columbia, or representing himself or permitting himself to be represented as so pr the board of examiners in veterinary medicine of said District, so far as may be necessary to examine such licenses, and it shall be unlawful for any person to interfere with any inspection made or intended to be made for this purpose.

SEC. 8. That from and after the passage of this act any person shall be regarded as practicing veterinary medicine in the District of Columbia who shall, in said District, append or cause to be appended to his name the letters V. S., D. V. M., V. M. D., M. D. V., M. D. C., D. V. S., or M. R. C. V. S., or the words "veterinary," "veterinarian," "veterinary surgeon," or "veterinary dentist," "veterinary farrier," "veterinary surgeon," or "veterinary dentist," "veterinary farrier," "veterinary horseshoer," "horse dentist," or "horse doctor," or who shall prescribe, advise, or apply any drug or medicine or other agency, or who shall perform any operation for the treatment, relief, or cure of any sick, diseased, or injured lower animal, or for commercial purposes, or who shall publicly profess to do any of these things, and shall charge or receive therefor money or other compensation, directly or indirectly.

SEC. 9. That this act shall not apply to veterinary surgeons in the Army or in the employ of the Agricultural Department who are graduates of regular veterinary colleges, nor to regularly licensed veterinarians in actual consultation from other States, nor to regularly licensed veterinarians actually called from other States to attend cases in the District of Columbia, but who do not open an office or appoint a place to do business within said District.

SEC. 10. That the board of examiners in veterinary medicine hereby created may, by a vote of four members, revoke or suspend for a time certain the license of any person to practice veterinary medicine or any branch thereof in the District of Columbia after notice and hearing, for any of the following causes, namely: The employment of fraud or deception in passing the examinations or in obtaining a license, chronic inebriety, or act.

SEC. 11. That any person who shall violate or aid or abet in violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $200 or by imprisonment in the workhouse of the District of Columbia for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 12. That it shall be the duty of the corporation counsel or one of his assistants to prosecute all violations of the provisions of this sect.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

products must be prevented from falling on the floor while being emptied into the tanks by the use of some device, such as a metal funnel.

(k) All carcasses, heads, untrimmed lungs with liver attached, spleens, and tongues of animals not killed in the presence of an inspector in the service of the health department shall be hung on racks provided for that purpose immediately after slaughtering, and shall remain there if the slaughtering be done after midnight and before noon until 6 o'clock p. m. of the same day, and if the slaughtering be done after noon and before midnight until noon of the following day, unless sooner examined by an inspector aforesaid. All such carcasses and organs shall be marked by the person placing them on the racks hereinbefore provided for in such manner that such organs can be positively identified with the carcass from which they have been removed.

(1) At least 1 inch of the diaphragm of every slaughtered animal shall be left on each animal until an inspector shall have examined, inspected, and passed the same (save in the case of cattle, in which at least 6 inches of said diaphragm shall be left on each animal), and the parietal pleura, or lining of the chest cavity, and the parietal peritoneum, or lining of the abdominal cavity, ordinarily removed in the process known as "stripping," shall remain upon each carcass.

Sc. 5. That no owner and no manager of a slaughterhouse shall slaughter or permit to be slaughtered therein any cattle, sheep, swine, calf, or goat except between the hours of sunrise and sunset unless he has been authorized so to do by the health officer, nor otherwise than in accordance with such authorization.

Scc. 6. That every owner and every manager of a slaughterhouse that is not regularly and continuously used for slaughtering shall fix certain days, and shall fix, and so far as is practicable limit the hours for slaughtering in such slaughterhouse shall slaughter or permit to be slaughtered therein any cattle, sheep, swine, calf, or goat, except on the days and desire so to do and of the hours when such slaughtering is to be done.

Sec. 7. That upon each carcass inspected and passed by an inspector in the service of the health department there shall be placed at the time of inspection labels or marks bearing the registration number of the slaughterhouse and the words "D. C. Inspected and passed," as follows: Upon each dressed beef carcass at least ten labels or marks, and upon each dressed carcass of a calf, sheep, swine, or goat, at least two.

Sec. 8. That each carcass or part of carcass inspected and condemned by an inspector in the service of the health department shall be so anointed or injected with kerosene as effectually to prevent its sale.

Sec. 9. That except in so far as relates to location and registration, these regulations shall not apply to stock yards, slaughterhouses, and packing houses, in which, under inspection by the Federal Government, animals are kept and slaughtered, and in which meat products are prepared for interstate and foreign commerce.

Sec. 10. That any person violating the provisions of these regulations shall be punished, upon conviction thereof, by a fine not exceeding $200.

Sec. 11. That this act shall take effect from and after the expiration of two months immediately following the approval thereof.

Mr. Mann Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I yield for a question.
Mr. MANN. From aught that appears from hearing the bill read it would seem the bill repeals, as far as the District of Columbia is concerned, to a large extent the meat-inspection law, if not the pure-food law. I suppose, of course, it is not the intention of the bill, but is not all of this controlled by the meatinspection law which we passed last session in the agricultural appropriation act?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I am informed that the meat-inspection law which was passed at the last session does not cover the District of Columbia, and for that reason it is sought to read that act into the District of Columbia Code. The report of this bill was made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell], a member of the committee, and I will yield time to him to explain its contents and purport.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is not to repeal the meat-inspection law nor the pure-food law. On the contrary, the purpose of the bill is to provide for the people of the District of Columbia as pure food and meat, as free from disease as can be had in any other section of the country, under the law passed at the last session of this Congress. Prior to the enactment of the Federal meat-inspection law live stock killed in adjacent States was brought in here without provision for inspection. At that time there was no provision for inspecting meats here in the District. To-day animals that would not stand the test if killed in slaughterhouses in Maryland or Virginia, under the meat-inspection law passed at the last session, may be brought into the District of Columbia and slaughtered here in slaughterhouses without passing such a rigid inspection as is necessary for the protection of the public against diseased meat. And the purpose of this bill is to protect the people of the District from having animals brought in from adjoining States and slaughtered here in evasion of the meat-inspection law of the last Congress. Meat killed in the District of Columbia for consumption here is not covered by the meat-inspection law nor the pure-food law of the last Congres

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. At least that seems to be the opinion of the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia and of the Commissioners.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken, I think, in reference to the opinion of the corporation counsel. The pure-food law, so far as it covers the subject at all-of course it does not cover the subject of slaughtering of animals-covers everything in the District of Columbia, and the corporation counsel does not say otherwise. I think the gentleman is correct about the examination of the meat-inspection law, that through an inadvertence provision in reference to the District of Columbia only apply to meats that go outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Or shipped in. And the purpose of this bill is to read the meat-inspection law into the laws of the District of Columbia for the government of the inspection of animals slaughtered for consumption here.

Mr. MANN. I remember that when the pure-food law was enacted the Commissioners of the District of Columbia were very strongly opposed to including the District of Columbia in the territory embraced in that law; and I was a little bit suspicious that they might now be seeking to get out from under the operation of that law.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I hope the suspicion of the gentleman from Illinois has been allayed.

Mr. MANN. They are perfectly allayed by the gentleman from Kansas

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For a question; yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to call his attention to the provision on page 5, as follows:

No person shall dwell or reside in any building used as a slaughter-house or packing house or in which meat is kept or offered for sale.

In this District, as in other cities, there are a number of butcher stores and buildings parts of which are used for residential purposes by persons not very well to do. This provision will make it utterly impossible-

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. To what line does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] refer?

Mr. FITZGERALD. To lines 11, 12, 13, and 14, on page 5. That language makes it utterly impossible to maintain a butcher store for the sale of meat in any building in which there are tenants.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. This only provides that slaughter-

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think the "or" should be stricken out.

Mr. Speaker, I move an amendment, to strike out the word "or," following the word "house," in line 13, on page 5.

Mr. MANN. That is, the gentleman strikes out the word or," after the word "house," in line 13?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 13, strike out the word "or;" so that the sentence will read:

"No person shall dwell or reside in any building used as a slaughterhouse or packing house in which meat is kept or offered for sale."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the gentleman's attention to one feature of this bill. It may be right and it may not. The bill prohibits an owner of a pig even from slaughtering the pig upon his own premises for his own per-The first section of the bill provides that no animal intended for food shall be slaughtered anywhere in the District of Columbia except in a registered slaughterhouse. it the intention of the committee to prevent one living in the suburbs of the city, in the outskirts, but still in the District of Columbia, one who runs a small truck farm and who may raise a few pigs or calves-is it the intention of the committee to make it unlawful for him to slaughter an animal so raised for his own private use?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In answer to the gentleman from Indiana I will say that it is not the intention of the law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Read the first section. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I call the gentleman's atten-

Mr. CAMPBELL of Raisas. I can the gentleman's attention to line 12 on the first page of the bill. He will notice that the reading there is: "Where such meat products are for sale."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But, if the gentleman pleases, he is referring to another thing. Read the first section. It makes it unqualifiedly unlawful for any person to slaughter any animal for purposes of food except in a regularly registered slaughterhouse. Nothing can be plainer. I have no doubt the bill does make it unlawful for a man to slaughter an animal anywhere else except in a slaughterhouse. No person who might raise a pig for family use upon his little peasant farm could slaughter the pig at home. This would compel him to carry it to a slaughterhouse to have it slaughtered. The first section of the bill, standing alone, declares that unequivocably, and it is not open to construction.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I wish the gentleman from Indiana would call attention to that part of the clause.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I do not care to refer to that clause; but the first section is unequivocal, and is not open to construction.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I wish the gentleman would call attention to that portion of the first section of the bill which prohibits one from killing an animal upon his own premises for his own use.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman read the first section?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The first section provides:

That no person shall slaughter for food any cattle, sheep, swine, calf, or goat elsewhere than in a registered slaughterhouse.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. For food. No person may slaughter a pig in his own barnyard or pigpen for food. That is what the first section provides. There is no doubt about its meaning. do not see how it can mean anything else. If the gentleman would put in, after the word "food," "for purposes of sale" it would remedy the matter. I do not think it is the intention and policy of the committee to compel people who raise pigs in the suburbs of the city to drive them to a slaughterhouse to have them slaughtered.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will say that I am not sure that would not be a good provision. I think swine fed in back yards in the District of Columbia or in any other city of its size ought not to be slaughtered for food without being first inspected to see whether they are diseased and suitable for food, whether they are intended for use or for sale.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is not the provision. The provision says they must be slaughtered at a registered slaughter-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I suggest, after the word "food," in the first section, there be inserted the words "for purposes of Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have no objection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I suggest that as an amendment. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I wish to offer an amendment, so as to make it read: "That no person shall slaughter for purposes of sale."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That will do.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 3, page 1, strike out the word "food" and insert "for purposes of sale."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF THE STREETS OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 14897, which is on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up a bill the title of which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14897) providing for the temporary maintenance of the Long Bridge over the Potomac River, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is unfinished business, as the Chair understands.

Yes. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in ref-Mr. BABCOCK. erence to this bill, that the Long Bridge is now being demolished and that part of the bill is unnecessary to consider, and I desire to offer a substitute for the whole bill that I think is satisfactory to all concerned.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute. The gentleman moves to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:
"That from and after the 1st day of January, 1908, every wagon or other vehicle of whatsoever kind or description, weighing when loaded more than 5,000 pounds, used, operated, or propelled on, over, or across any of the streets, avenues, alleys, bridges, or roadways of the District of Columbia, shall have wheel tires not less than 4 inches broad. Any owner or driver or other person in control of such wagon or other vehicle so using, operating, or propelling the same who shall violate the provisions of this section shall, on conviction thereof in the police court of the District of Columbia, be punished by a fine not exceeding $25, or by imprisonment for not more than sixty days, or both." Amend the title to read: "A bill to protect the streets of the city of Washington."

Mr. MUDD. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. MUDD. I did not quite hear the substitute as read in its entirety. I understand, however, that it provides that it shall take effect January 1, 1908.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. MUDD. And it makes the weight of wagons as loaded 5,000 pounds instead of 2 tons, above which the requirement as to broad tires is to take effect?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. MUDD. That is satisfactory to me. Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the substitute will be considered as agreed to, and the bill as amended will be considered as engrossed, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I understand the Chair is asking for unanimous consent for the passage of the substitute. The SPEAKER. The Chair was under the impression that there was no objection to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; there is very serious objection.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute in lieu of the bill-that is, the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand the substitute, it is the same provision of law, except that it postpones the date for it to go into operation. Is that correct?

Mr. BABCOCK. No; it increases the amount of the load to 5,000 pounds. The bill originally provided for 4,000 pounds. This increases it to 5,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And says that all wagons carrying that load shall have these broad tires.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; more than 5,000.

Mr. MUDD. May I suggest to the gentleman from Missis-sippi that I take it for granted that all those who were opposed to the original bill will at least be glad to have it amended by the adoption of this substitute, which makes it less oppressive than it was before. For myself I want to say—

Mr. WILLIAMS. But if we pass the substitute, the substitute becomes a law as far as the House is concerned.

Mr. MUDD. I apprehend that all of us will agree to the substitute as an amendment to the original bill. The substitute makes it better than it was before.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If we could act on this as an amendment to the provision and afterwards could vote down the provision as amended, that would be a different proposition, but you are offering it as a substitute, and when you vote it up it is up for

Mr. MUDD. No; after voting to adopt the substitute we can vote down the bill as amended by the substitute. I am frank to say that by the adoption of the substitute the bill will become fairly satisfactory to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not satisfactory to me, and I do not think it will be satisfactory to the farmers of Maryland and Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The situation is this: If the substitute offered by way of amendment is agreed to, that does not pass the bill, but that question will have to be taken afterwards.

Mr. MUDD. No; we can adopt this substitute at all events. The SPEAKER. The question would come up afterwards on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment. I move to strike out the word "five" where it occurs and insert the word "four."

The gentleman from Iowa offers the follow-The SPEAKER. ing amendment to the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3 of the substitute strike out the word "five" and insert the ord "four;" so that it will read "more than 4,000 pounds."

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this amendment ought to meet the approval of the Members of this House. Our streets here are bad enough at best. This is in the direction of their protection. Look at the matter practically. is a tire that is of ordinary width, 2 inches. After that is worn a little—it wears first at the edges—it has a rounded surface and the bearing point upon the pavement is exceedingly narrow, perhaps not an inch wide. It is a gross outrage to allow 4,000 pounds on four bearing points on our streets that are not more than an inch in width, and at most 2 or 3 inches in length. The destruction is very great, and it ought not to be permitted. Especially is that true in very warm weather. When the asphaltum pavement is softened you will see that the marks of very heavily laden wagons are easily to be discerned for a distance of several rods. That ought not to be. It will be a simple matter to change the tires of these very heavy wagons to 4 or 5 inches, and I think the House ought to see to it in the protection of the streets that this is done in order that we may have what we ought to have in this city, model streets. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he knows of any city which has such a requirement as

Mr. HEPBURN. I don't know whether any other city has it or not, but I think I know that the city of Washington ought Those who oppose this amendment, Mr. Speaker, They are the are doing it in the interest of very few people. brick haulers from across into Virginia and the coal dealers. Mr. JONES of Virginia. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?
Mr. HEPBURN. To either one, or both.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I just want to say to the gentleman that the Business Men's Association-without exception, every business man in the city—is opposed to it.

Mr. HEPBURN. If they are, then I have no respect whatever for the judgment of the business men of the city of Washing-

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I want to say another thing to the gentleman. As I understand this bill it has never been referred to the District Commissioners; they have never been asked, as is usually the case, for their opinion upon this measure.

Mr. HEPBURN. I don't know whether that is true or not, and I am not sure that it is absolutely necessary that we should have their opinion. This is a matter upon which men can form their own judgments. We do not have to ask an expert. Those people who are as familiar with the streets of the city as is the gentleman from Virginia know that a heavily loaded wagon, especially one with an old wagon tire, is a menace to the streets of this town, and it ought not to be per-I do not think there are 200 vehicles which belong to the people of the city of Washington that will be affected by this legislation, and as to those 200 it is important that the tires upon them should be corrected.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. I wish to state to the gentleman that the District Committee had a hearing for the people representing these interests, and they failed to convince us that there was any hardship.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a few words with reference to this bill, as I have given the subject a good deal of time and attention. When the statement is made here that the business men of Washington are opposed to this as a The business men, or a large number of whole, that is an error. them in the city of Washington, have appealed to me within the last week to pass this bill before Congress adjourns. Now, this committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, requested the police department to examine every heavily laden wagon that came in from the country, from Virginia and Maryland, to the markets-these large loads of hay and produce where they use four horses. In only one single instance, in an inspection covering thirty days, was there one heavily laden wagon with a tire of less than four inches. There was only one wagon found in thirty days that carried over 4,000 pounds or 4,500 which had less than a 4-inch tire. It is absolutely necessary in the country to use a wide tire to protect the roads and keep the wagons from going down through them. So that it does not affect that in-terest at all. I will tell you the interest that it does affect. It affects the draymen and the truckmen from Alexandria and the brick dealers from Virginia, and, by the way, the president of the largest brick manufacturing plant said to me, 'I hearfily indorse the bill, and every wagon we use I shall guarantee will have a 4-inch tire; we ought to have it for our own convenience, as well as for the preservation of the streets."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the gentleman goes on, I should ask the gentleman if he has heard from the mill men in Washington-the flour mill men?

Mr. BABCOCK. Why, I have heard from them in connection with the draymen of Washington.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They make protests; in fact, the protests are chiefly from the mill men.

Mr. BABCOCK. If I neglected to state it, I will state it also comes from the express companies and these parties here doing heavy hauling. Now, I want to give the gentleman an instance of that which occurred last week and was reported to me by a representative gentleman here, Mr. C. C. Glover, who stated he had occasion to drive out Massachusetts avenue last week and followed a wagon that had a heavy load, consisting of a very large piece of stone which the wagon was taking out to the uni-They went down Massachusetts avenue, and after they reached the macadamized street the wagon sank down to the depth of 8 inches in the street, and they had to drive diagonally across the street, and as it went on farther the wagon settled to the hub in an improved street, in a macadamized street, where they had to abandon the wagon and take the four horses away. Now, that is one instance that occurred last week. Now, the Committee on Appropriations, or this Congress, has provided for the resurfacing of Pennsylvania avenue, and I want to say to this House that if you permit these loads of 4, 5, and 6 tons on 2½-inch tires to traverse the streets, you will have to resurface it again in two or three years. It costs the District of Columbia an immense amount of money and when one of these heavy loads is on a narrow tire it makes an abrasion in the street and the next wagon makes it deeper, and the next makes it deeper, until you find the street full of holes, as it is now. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, the use of 2½-inch tires will cost the District of Columbia \$200,000 a year. There is no reason on God's earth why these wagons should not have 4-inch tires that will support these heavy loads. It is the first little abrasion that does the harm, and I want to say, Mr. Speaker, it is only those who are directly interested, only those who are using 2½-inch tires that have come before us and opposed this legislation. consider it absolutely necessary as a measure of economy. believe, Mr. Speaker, we had better appropriate money to-day to buy 4-inch tires for every dray in the city of Washington rather than to permit them to go on using 2 and  $2\frac{1}{2}$  inch tires. [Applause.1

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly. Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman's argument is tolerably sound if the premise was at all sound. Since this matter was up the last time I have walked over a great many of the asphalt streets of Washington with a view of seeing whether these very statements of facts are well founded or not. The gentleman has stated that the streets are torn up by these wheels. I at this time state that where the breaks in the asphalt occur they occur in the other direction. Now, I have walked down Pennsylvania avenue, Massachusetts avenue, Connecticut avenue, and Fourteenth street, and there is not a single instance of a cut in the street in the direction of the street made by a narrow tire, and the gentleman can not find one. The breaks that are in the asphalt when they occur are, as a rule, perpendicular to the line of the street, and are made by the changes in temperature or by the fact that the asphalt was not well laid down. Pennsylvania avenue is in holes everywhere right now, but it is not in cuts, it is not in ruts; it is in holes, and those holes, as a rule, are due to the fact that when that pavement was made there was not a sufficient foundation under the pavement. It was not properly built. If you are going to resurface Pennsylvania avenue, you will do a very good work.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit? Has he heard the report made by the bicycle policemen on Pennsylvania avenue, that the destruction of the surface of the street there was caused by the heaviness of the loads and the narrowness of the

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not, and I do not care. I invite the Members of this House to walk this evening down Pennsylvania avenue to the Treasury, and they will find that what I have said is absolutely the fact. I do not care who makes a report, There is not a single rut in the asphalt parallel with the sidewalk as it would be if made by wagons. What holes are in the asphalt are holes on the transverse, and that is owing to the effect on the character of the asphalt by change of temperature. One would naturally conclude that the contraction and the expansion would be better taken care of parallel with the sidewalk, because the distance is so much greater when there is an upheaval, whereas between curb and curb the weather does cause a break in the surface from undue expansion at one time and contraction at another. These people who have been protesting to me, at any rate, were men like Mr. McDowell, of the great flour mill down here-principally the mill men.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is right. They protest against it. Mr. WILLIAMS. And it was not simply the brick men over in Alexandria or somewhere else.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I thought I heard some one say a few moments ago that there was no other city in the United States that had a wide-tire ordinance. I did not suppose that there was any city in the United States that had any decent streets that did not have a wide-tire ordinance. I know there has been one in my own town for years, and I know that there are such in a good many other towns.

Now, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] seems to think that he has demonstrated the case because he can not find a rut running the whole length of Pennsylvania avenue or a good portion of it. Why, the gentleman totally misapprehends the way the streets get out of repair. It is not by narrow tires cutting through the asphalt down to the foundation and running from one end of the street to the other or running any particular length. The asphalt gets soft in places; the narrow tire comes in and depresses it a little bit, perhaps the next one a little more, and then the water settles there. Under the action of the water it finally affects the asphalt and produces these holes we find in the pavements of the streets, and, of course, you would not find a rut, running in the direction of the street, gouged out by a tire. It is the effect of the water after the tire has made the de-Every expert in road building in the United States pression. will tell the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that a narrow tire destroys the roadway. I do not care whether it is asphalt pavement or whether it is macadam or whether it is a gravel road, it is the narrow tire that does the business. It takes but a little at a time, and the water sets in, and the water standing in the roadway is what finally eats out the roadway. It softens it, and then the wagons come over it with narrow tires, and even wider tires, and it constantly wears out the whole of the street, and we have as a consequence what we see in Pennsylvania avenue and Massachusetts avenue and almost every other avenue and street in the city of Washington. And it seems to me a very mild proposition to say that wagons that carry two tons should be required to have broad tires.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that heavy wagons are forbidden to drive through the grounds around the Capitol here, and if it is not a fact that the pavement around here where heavy wagons are kept off is in worse condition than in those parts of the city where these heavy wagons come?

Mr. PAYNE. I have not found it so, because I have found the worst pavements on the streets that I generally travel, and those are the most generally traveled streets.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not a fact that the history of all pavements shows that where there is no traffic at all on the streets the pavements wear out quicker than where there is traffic on the streets?

I had not discovered that. Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. MADDEN. That is the fact.
Mr. PAYNE. I do not believe it is the fact.

Mr. MADDEN. It is the fact.
Mr. PAYNE. It can not be possible, if they are properly made in the first place. Without talking any further upon the proposition, because on its face it is an absurd proposition—

Mr. MADDEN. Nevertheless it is true.
Mr. PAYNE. Of course, if it is true, then the more narrow tires go over the street the more you improve it. The gentleman from Illinois can hardly pursue such a proposition as that.

I hope this amendment will be adopted, and the bill will pass.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. BABCOCK. What time does the gentleman wish?
Mr. JONES of Virginia. Ten minutes.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the statement of the gentleman from New York, who has just taken his seat, I want to read from a statement made by a gentleman who is an expert and who, therefore, knows something about laying pavements and who is capable of speaking as to their durability. I read from an account of a meeting held in this city last year, reported in the Evening Star. This meeting of business men was held for the purpose of protesting against this very measure, and at that meeting Mr. P. J. Brennan gave expert testimony as to the use of narrow tires upon asphalt pavements. It seems to me that the opinion of such a witness is entitled to much weight. I read from the Evening Star report:

Mr. P. J. Brennan, president of the Brennan Construction Company, which has laid a large portion of the asphalt pavements in this city, stated that his company lays these pavements under contract, which makes them liable for the good condition of the pavements for five years, and they have to give bond that they will correct any defect in the pavements occurring in that time. But he would prefer having tires of diversified sizes rather than tires of 4 inches. He did not consider that a 2-inch tire would be any more harmful than a 4-inch tire. What the pavements really suffer from, he said, is the lack of travel. An asphalt pavement that is not sufficiently traveled, he said, will be in worse condition than one that is greatly traveled by teams carrying tires of different widths.

As against the mere opinions of gentlemen who do not pretend to any special knowledge upon subjects of this character I submit the opinion of one who not only has had large experience in putting down asphalt pavements in this city, but who also has a personal and direct interest in their preservation. Being under bond to repair such damages as may be sustained by the pavements from their use by heavy wagons, his opinion is surely entitled to the very highest credit.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me? Mr. JONES of Virginia. Yes; for a question.

Mr. PAYNE. Considering the fact that the more the-pavement is worn out the more there would be to be laid, his motives or interest drew him in the other direction as well as in the direction of the testimony on your side of the question.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I further-

Mr. PAYNE. One further question. This I understand was a meeting of the business men here, the men who wanted these narrow-tired wagons?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I hope this interruption does not come out of my time.

Mr. PAYNE. I say that the meeting was one called by these business men to protest against the passage of this law.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I stated that. And now I want to say that this gentleman further stated that the asphalt pavements which are little used suffer more from that cause than do those which are in constant use.

Mr. BABCOCK. I wish to say, in reference to that gentle-man, that he convinced himself before the committee that the 2-inch tires were better than the 4, and also that if the asphalt, if it was not used at all, would at once disintegrate and be of no He said that 11-inch was better than 4-inch for the wagons used in the city of Washington.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in response to the statement made by another gentleman, that the people who objected to this 4-inch tire were only Virginians engaged in hauling brick from Virginia to this city, I want to read this communication addressed to my colleague [Mr. Rixey], who represents the district in Virginia adjacent to this city:

MARCH 9, 1906.

Hon. John F. Rixey, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: At a largely attended meeting of the board of directors of the Business Men's Association, held March 8, House bill No. 14897 came up before the board and was thoroughly discussed; and on motion of Mr. W. 8. Knox, duly seconded by Mr. P. Brennan, it was resolved that the association go on record as being unalterably opposed to the third section of said bill, it being agreed that the adoption of said section would work an unpecessary hardship and unwarranted expense to the owners and users of teams hauling 2 tons or more. It was further agreed that the association use its good offices and every honorable means to defeat said legislation in becoming a law.

Very truly, yours,

Jas. F. Oyster, President.

JAS. F. OYSTER, President.' WM. F. GUDE, Secretary.

These gentlemen, representing the Business Men's Association of this city, not people engaged in hauling brick from Virginia to the city of Washington, have gone on record as being unalterably opposed to this legislation. Naturally the people of Virginia and Maryland who haul their products to this city in heavy wagons are opposed to this proposed legislation, but they are not alone in their opposition.

The manufacturers of brick in Virginia who send their bricks here in heavy wagons, the farmers whose market wagons come, as well as the business men of this city who will be affected by this proposed legislation are all opposed to it. They oppose it because it will entail upon them heavy and, as I believe, need-less expense. Upon many farmers it will be a real hardship.

Why has not this measure been referred to the Commissioners for the District of Columbia? Such, I am told, has been the invariable course in all matters of legislation of this character. Had that course been pursued in this case this House would have now before it facts which are now wanting-facts which would doubtless convince every mind here that this measure ought not to pass this House. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the House will be safer in accepting the testimony of the business men of this city and the experts who have given opinions in reference to this matter than in accepting those of my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. I agree with what has been said by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Williams], for I have but recently carefully observed the streets of Washington, and I have failed to find any evidence of injury to the asphalt pavements resulting from the use of narrow tires. The sun has caused far more injury to pavements than narrow tires. The slightest examination of the asphalt pavement along the east front of this Capitol building, where the use of light vehicles is only permitted, and the same pave-ments near the Long Bridge, over which heavy wagons, with narrow tires, pass, will, I think, clearly demonstrate the cor-rectness of the position taken by the business men of this city. I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], that I have here the statements of the mayors of Philadelphia, Balti-more, and of Richmond, all to the effect that there is no requirement in those cities with reference to the use of wide or narrow tires. I should have said that in Richmond heavy wagons are not permitted to use tires less than two and a half inches in width. In the other two cities named there is absolutely no requirement on the subject. I imagine that the streets in the city of Philadelphia, where narrow tires are permitted, are in just as good condition as are those in the city which my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has the honor to represent.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. You may. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What does the gentleman from Virginia think is the effect of these narrow tires, and the hauling of brick across the river on the Long Bridge and the approaches to the bridge, where the surface is not asphalt? "What is the effect of the narrow tires there as compared with the wide ones?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I do not know whether there is asphalt on the bridge or not. I rather think there is.

Mr. BABCOCK. On the bridge, but not on the approaches. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. On all of those places which are not covered with asphalt, what is the effect?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I have not examined the bridge, but I understand this to be the case, that when the movement in favor of wide tires was first inaugurated, it was because of the fact that the approaches to the bridge had been but recently paved. The bridge had been recently built, and the idea was that inasmuch as the roadbeds had not settled, the use of these narrow tires might be injurious. Now that the roadbeds have thoroughly settled, as I imagine is the case, there can be little excuse for the passage of this measure.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What about the macadamized approaches?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I am speaking of the asphalt pave-I know nothing about the macadamized roads.

I mean streets that are not paved with Mr. SHACKLEFORD. asphalt. What is the effect of the narrow tire as compared with the wide one upon them?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I should think that on dirt roads, or such roads as the gentleman appears to have in mind, wide tires would be better than narrow ones; but I think all the testimony goes to show, and as far as my observation goes it confirms that testimony, that narrow tires have not injured the streets of Washington any more than wide ones have.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I can corroborate the statement of the gentlemen from Mississippi as to the appearance of the surface of the streets. It is true that there seem to be breaks in the streets lengthwise, crosswise, and every other way. Evidently they are not caused by tires or the lack of tires; but this law applies to the whole District of Columbia, and the streets of the District are not all paved with asphalt. It does seem to me that asphalt paving is such a peculiar thing that it is difficult to judge it by comparison with anything except itself. But upon the idea of the gentleman from New York or some other gentlemen who have spoken on this matter, in many cases the bed work or foundation upon which the asphalt is laid is defective. If there is a defect beneath the surface of the asphalt, it may be small; it may be crosswise or lengthwise with the street. It is perfectly natural that a great weight upon a narrow tire would come nearer to breaking it than if it was a broad surface, upon the same principle that you can walk on snow with snowshoes when you could not with skates. Now, it does seem to me that 5,000 pounds is so large a load that most of the hauling that will be made with tires less than 4 inches wide will not exceed that weight anyway, and that there can not be any very great hardship in requiring persons who haul over 5,000 pounds, including the weight of their wagon, to adopt the wide tire.

Certainly nobody will contend that a 4-inch tire will hurt the payement or injure the surface of it or be more injurious than the narrow tire. It does seem to me that this is a reasonable proposition, and that we will get rid of this question by adopting the substitute, making it 5,000 pounds instead of 4,000, as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa; and the time of the going into effect of the law being postponed until next January, those who have narrow tires and heavy draft wagons will have plenty of time in which to change their tires or wheels without any great loss to them. As the law is now you can put 10 tons onto a wagon with narrow tires, if you can get that weight onto the wagon.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; and they had 10 tons on a 2½-inch tire, and the last I knew of it the wagon stood in the middle of the street down to its hubs.

SIMS. Certainly it will not be easier to overload a broad-tired wagon so as to injure the surface of the street than it would be to overload a narrow-tired wagon to the same extent, I do not think there is any great hardship in this bill as Gentlemen who own wagons have talked with me and discussed this matter a great deal, and, of course, they do not want to have to change their tires. But I believe, from a fair investigation, having studied the matter since last winter, taking the District as a whole and knowing it is not all paved with asphalt and never will be, and that wagons come in here from the States, we ought to adopt some reasonable measure. I believe to require a 4-inch tire for 5,000 pounds is not unreasonable or a hardship, and that we had better adopt the substitute and be done with the matter.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL].

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made here a few minutes since that the use of wide tires for heavy wagons is not required in other cities, I wish to state a little experience or observation on the subject. I live in Syracuse, N. Y. Some years ago our streets were in very bad condition, largely made so by the hauling over them of heavy loads in narrow-tired wagons. There are several small quarries outside of our city some 4 or 5 miles, and the heavily laden stone wagons were drawn into the city and through its streets. Those wagons were then equipped with narrow tires, and were cutting up the streets so that it was impossible to keep them in good condition. An ordinance was passed by the common council of our city during the mayoralty of Mr. Belden, my predecessor in Many of the people who had been accustomed to use narrow tires objected strenuously to that ordinance, and claimed that it was unconstitutional. They took the matter to the courts, in which it was held that the ordinance was valid. Wide tires were then required to be put on those heavy stone wagons, and since then on all heavy wagons. Since that time our streets have been improved, largely because they have not been cut up so badly by narrow-tired, heavily laden wagons. It is manifest that on a dirt or a macadam or any kind of a soft road a wide tire is better than a narrow one. It acts as a sort of roller, while a narrow one cuts down into the street and tears it up. It is admitted here that the wide tire is better than the narrow one for macadam and dirt roads and all sorts of roads except asphalt or other pavement. The narrow tire may not damage the asphalt very much in winter or in cold weather when the material is hard, but in summer when it is soft the narrow tire does cut the pavement.

We have all seen the time in this city when the horses going along the streets in midsummer, when the pavement is almost steaming, that the calks of the borses and also the narrow tires of wagons cut into the asphalt. Also in winter narrow tires do more damage to asphalt pavement than do wide tires. Holes or depressions may be made in the asphalt by many causes, and after a hole or depression is once made down to the concrete then certainly the narrow tire injures it more than does the wide tire. In cold weather the asphalt is pretty hard and brittle, and when it breaks off it breaks off in chunks, and when the wagon wheel comes along and strikes it it breaks off a little. Now, a narrow tire of the same weight, force, and speed striking against the edge of the pavement does more damage than a wide tire. Common observation and experience with familiar things lead to that conclusion. I suppose that in nearly all the well-regulated cities of the country wide-tire ordinances for heavily laden wagons are in existence and also enforced, and Washington should not be an exception to other well-regulated and progressive cities. This is a beautiful city. It is pretty well kept and is very expensive. It is not much of a hardship to require men using heavily loaded wagons to do their part toward keeping the streets in order. They ought to do that of their own free will, by reason of their civic pride and desire to have the city look as beautiful as possible; and if they are not so disposed, they should be compelled to do so. And the committee is right in requiring that men drawing heavy loads over the streets of our city be compelled to do their part toward preserving the good condition of our streets, even at a little extra expense to them.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING].

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, I thought it was long ago conceded that broad tires were the best conservators of roads that can be had. Certain it is that in towns in Massachusetts with which I am familiar, where they have used broad tires, they have reduced the cost of care and maintenance of the roads from 30 to 40 per cent. Of this I can bring proof. It is a wellknown fact that in Europe on toll roads the tolls are graded according to the width of the tires, and they even go to the extent of not demanding toll from wagons which have tires 4 or 5 inches in width. I hope this amendment will be adopted here. believe in fixing the limit at 4,000 rather than 5,000 pounds. I think if it is adopted here it will be followed by State legislatures enacting similar legislation throughout the country, and for that reason, among others, as an example we ought to adopt it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mudd) there were—ayes 113, noes 51.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to amend the bill-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. BABCOCK. Not for an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield for the purposes of offering an amendment.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to the gentleman. My amendment is simply to provide that this should be for the load without the wagon. The wagon will weigh 4,000 pounds in some instances. I appeal to the gentleman to permit me to offer the amendment.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to protect the streets of the city of Washington."

RETENT ON CONTRACTS WITH THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21684) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "Au act regulating the retent on contracts with the District of Columbia," approved March 31, 1906.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act regulating the retent on contracts with the District of Columbia," approved March 31, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it shall read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That this act shall cover and comprehend all contracts for the construction of bridges, sewers, buildings, and other contracts for construction work, as herein specified, which are now completed or which may hereafter be completed by the contractors according to their contracts and accepted by the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read-the third time, and passed.

SERVICE ON FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the bill (S. 7170) to amend an act relating to service on foreign corporations, approved June 30, 1902, entitled "An act to amend an aet entitled 'An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia.'"

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved June 30, 1902, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia,'" be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"When a foreign corporation shall transact business in the District without having any place of business or resident agent therein, service upon any officer or agent or employee of such corporation in the District shall be effectual as to suits growing out of contracts entered into or to be performed, in whole or in part, in the District of Columbia or growing out of any tort heretofore or hereafter committed in the said District."

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the second paragraph of section 1537 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to make a statement to the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice to the House that inasmuch as it was expected by a large number of the membership of the House to-day that the urgent deficiency bill, which lately passed the House and was amended in the Senate, carrying a loan of $1,000,000 to the Jamestown Exposition Company, was to come up to-day, by agreement has been postponed until to-morrow morning, and will be brought up to-morrow morning. I promised on behalf of all parties interested to give this notice to the House.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope people will stay here, notwithstanding.

CONVENTION OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the bill (S. 6338) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Washington."

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act approved March 16, 1896, entitled "An act to incorporate the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Diocese of Washington," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. That the said corporation shall have full power and authority to take and hold subscriptions, contributions, donations, grants, devises, or bequests, in money, real estate, or otherwise, which heretofore have been made or which may hereafter be made for the purpose of an Episcopal residence, diocesan house, church colleges, church or parish schools, churches, or mission chapels, and for the purpose of creating a permanent fund or endowment for the support of the episcopate in said diocese, and to or in behalf of religious, missionary, charitable, or educational agencies' uses or purposes now existing or hereafter to exist, under the jurisdiction, control, or sanction of said convention within the limits of said diocese, the annual income from which shall not exceed $100,000, and the same to invest and the proceeds thereof to apply for the purposes aforesaid as may from time to time be deemed most expedient, and to appoint, in its discretion, an executive committee or other trustees, boards, or agencies, by whatsoever name or names they may be designated, to administer such funds or property in such manner and form and with such authority as the said corporation shall from time to time prescribe: Provided, however, and always, That in such administration the respective funds shall be kept distinct and separate; that each fund shall be held liable only for obligations that may have been incurred in its own proper behoof; and that the principal sum or amount of such subscriptions, contributions, donations, grants, devises, and bequests for permanent endowment of the episcopate shall be at all time invested in some safe and profitable stocks, real estate within the limits of the said diocese, mortgages, deeds of trust, or other securities, and the expenses of administering the same, the salary of the bishop, and other charges shall be payable and paid only out of the annual interest, dividends, or profits thereof: And provided further, That unless this amendment shall be accepted by resolution of the convention of the said diocese at its next annual meeting, and a copy of such resolution of acceptance, certified by the secretary of the convention, be filed for record with the recorder of deeds of the District, of Columbia within sixty days thereafter, the same shall become void and of no effect."

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

On page 2 strike out all commencing with the word "some," in line 22, down to and including the word "securities," in line 24, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"bonds of the United States or of the District of Columbia, in first-class State or municipal securities: in first mortgages or first deeds of trust on real estate not exceeding 60 per cent of the value of such real estate, or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation which has for five consecutive years immediately preceding such investment paid dividends on its common stock."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to offer a suggestion or two and an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr.

Mr. OLCOTT.

Mr. OLCOTT. Yes; I yield. Mr. CRUMPACKER. The bill provides for the amendment of an act incorporating the Protestant Episcopal Church, and it authorizes the church organization to receive bequests, donations, and devises of personal and real property and authorizes the property to be invested for ecclesiastical, educational, missionary, and charitable purposes, and there is no limit at all on the amount of the real estate the corporation may hold in the aggregate. I do not believe it is a wise policy to create a corporation of any kind without some limitation on the amount of the real estate it may own. I made an objection to a bill a day or two ago on that ground. The amendment I propose to offer limits the amount of real estate which this corporation may own at any one time to an aggregate of $2,000,000. Would that be satisfactory

Mr. OLCOTT. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the entire property, both real and personal, can not have an income of more than $100,000, and the corporation is only allowed to take real estate which is devised to them by will. We have stricken out the clause in the bill allowing them to invest in real estate, and have made a change which we believe in the line of conservatism, to prevent investing in real estate. They can take real estate by devise, the income of which added to the income of all their personal property does not exceed It seems to me that limitation is sufficient.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I noticed that provision in the bill, and I had some doubt-

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman excuse me for a moment?
That limitation now exists in the present law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What is the object of the amendment? Mr. OLCOTT. The object of this amendment is that the corporation was not allowed, and it is not allowed under the present law, to take devises of real estate. Now, wills have been made, and the corporation is now entitled under the terms of those wills to take a certain devise in real estate. It wishes authority to receive it. That is the main object.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There are a number of objections that I have to this kind of legislation. This corporation might possibly be the beneficiary of large bequests and devises and hold real estate without limit. Nobody knows what the future may

Mr. OLCOTT. Except the limitation is that the income from personal property and all of its real property shall not exceed

$100,000

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is that one limitation on income only, and the corporation owns many millions of dollars of real estate, and the influence of this great organization—and it is a very worthy organization-might be directed toward exempting all of this property that is used for educational, missionary, and charitable purposes from taxation.

Mr. OLCOTT. The specific real estate, however, that is exempted must be used for either church or educational purposes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does not the gentleman believe a limitation that the aggregate holdings of real estate shall not at any time exceed $2,000,000 would be a proper and safe one to incorporate in the bill?

Mr. OLCOTT. I am afraid to accept that. I can understand that, with the values as they are here in Washington, the cathedral site now and the buildings that will be erected by the members of the Protestant Episcopal Church would be more than $2,000,000. We are about erecting a cathedral in New York where we have spent much more than that, and it is not nearly completed.

Mr. CRUMPACKER, I think the policy is eminently bet-

Mr. OLCOTT. Income-bearing property can not be greater in value than $100,000. Therefore they would not be a monopoly, and there is no exemption of taxes on any real estate which the corporation holds from which it receives an income.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is none now perhaps. But here are numerous associations of this kind, religious and fraternal, that are securing incorporation and power under the Federal Government, and in the future they may own half of the city of Washington, and the combined influence of those great organizations throughout the country may be sufficient to exempt their entire holdings from taxation. I do not believe that the real estate of the country ought to be owned and held by corporations, except in so far as it is necessary to carry on the purpose of their creation.

Mr. OLCOTT. That was the reason that we made the amendment in the committee, that the investments can not be made in real estate. The corporation can only take real estate that is devised to it. Now the gentleman very well knows that not only here, but I think in every community, property that is owned by a religious corporation or an educational institution that is not used for purposes of religious instruction or for the purposes of education is not exempted from taxation. I think the fear of the gentleman from Indiana is unfounded.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I will not press my objection further. It may be the limitation on the income to $100,000 is a sufficient safeguard against the inordinate accumulation of real estate by this organization. This is a very worthy institution, I know; yet I think in making legislation we ought to have in view what may possibly arise under it—the possible exercise of the power that the bill carries. Real estate ought to be in private ownership chiefly, so it will be subject to the laws of inheritance that tend to prevent its monopolization.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL SAFE DEPOSIT, SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill S. 8014, a similar House bill having been reported. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 8014) to authorize The National Safe Deposit, Savings and Trust Company of the District of Columbia, to change its name to that of National Savings and Trust Company.

Be it enacted, etc., That the National Safe Deposit, Savings and Trust Company, of the District of Columbia, a body corporate, duly incorporated under an act approved October 1, 1890, and entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other corporations within the District of Columbia," be, and is hereby, authorized to change its name to National Savings and Trust Company, the said change of name to be complete and effectual when said corporation shall have filed with the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia an amended certificate of incorporation setting forth the change in name hereby authorized, and shall also have filed a copy of said amended certificate of incorporation with the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States.

Sec. 2. That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, the bill H. R. 24841, on the same subject, was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON MARKET COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up Senate bill 6470, which by error, as I think, is on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. By mistake the bill (S. 6470) in relation to the Washington Market Company was referred to the Union Calendar. It should have been referred to the House Calendar. The Chair, under the practice, will order its transfer; and the gentleman desires to call up the Senate bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to call up the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 6470) in relation to the Washington Market Company.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Washington Market Company be, and hereby is, authorized, in connection with the refrigeration of produce stored or sold at Center Market, to manufacture ice at any suitable place within the District of Columbia.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the Strike out all area and area following:

"That the Washington Market Company be, and it is hereby, arthorized to procure by purchase or lease all or part of square No. 328 in the city of Washington, and thereon conduct a cold-storage buri-ness and manufacture ice for use in Center Market and for sale: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be held to limit or affect in any way any of the provisions of 'An act to incorporate the Washington Market Company,' approved May 20, 1870.

"Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, without any liability therefor, is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. DRISCOLL. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.
Mr. DRISCOLL. Is this to give this company the power to condemn and purchase?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no; I understand they own the property now, but objection was made to the bill because it did not specifically describe the property. This bill does.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would like if the gentleman in charge of the bill would tell us who this Washington Market Company is and what their rights are in the premises which they now occupy.

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, I could not answer that question in detail, except to say that the Washington Market Company has the principal market here. It is a corporation authorized to do all things pertaining to a general market business. This bill is for the purpose of allowing them to build a cold storage or ice house near the depot. Under the provisions of their charter their attorney did not think they had the authority to build off the particular premises they occupy under their charter. This authorizes them to build an ice house on ground that they own.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill H. R. 20178, a similar House bill, was laid on the table.

PROHIBITING THE SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS NEAR CERTAIN INSTITUTIONS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 4267. The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 4267) to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors near the Government Hospital for the Insane and the District almshouse.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful to sell, either by wholesale or retail, intoxicating liquor of any kind at any point between the Government Hospital for the Insane and the District almshouse, or within a radius of one-half mile of the boundaries of either of said properties.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out the words "District almshouse" and insert "Home for the Aged and Infirm."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

An act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors near the Govern-ment Hospital for the Insane and the Home for the Aged and Infirm. SUPREME LODGE OF THE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the bill H. R. 17212.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17212) to amend an act to incorporate the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias.

of the Knights of Pythias.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of an act approved June 29, 1894, entitled "An act to incorporate the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Pythias," be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "not exceeding in value $100,000;" so that said section 2 shall read as follows:

"Sec. 2. That the said corporation shall have the power to take and hold real and personal estate, which shall not be divided among the members of the corporation, but shall descend to their successors for the promotion of the fraternal and benevolent purposes of said corporation."

Sec. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage and

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment along the line I offered a few moments ago.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. BABCOCK.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. At the end of section 2 insert the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 2 insert the following: "Provided, That said corporation shall not hold or own real estate to the aggregate value of $1,000,000 at any time."

Mr. BABCOCK. I accept the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have two small matters here which are on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole

The SPEAKER. The Whole House on the state of the Union? Mr. BABCOCK. No; the Committee of the Whole House. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that that committee may be discharged from the consideration of the bill S. 7028 and the bill S. 3702.

Mr. SIMS. What bills are they? Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman does not need to reserve the right.

He already has it.

The Chair will state that on Mondays, not-The SPEAKER. withstanding this bill S. 7028 is on the Private Calendar, under the rule and practice, as the Chair is advised, the gentleman may call up the bill for consideration. He might move to go into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering the bill; but now the gentleman asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House may be discharged from consideration of the bill, and that the same may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. What bill is it? Mr. MANN. We have not be We have not heard what the bill is yet.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 7028) for the relief of the Allis-Chalmers Company, of Milwaukee, Wis.

Be it enacted, etc., That he Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid from the appropriation for the water department, District of Columbia, extension of the high-service system. to the Allis-Chalmers Company, of Milwaukee, Wis., the sum of $8,870, deducted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as a penalty, under contract No. 3047, dated November 11, 1901.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, at the proper time I propose to make the point of order against this that the Committee on the District of Columbia had no jurisdiction to consider or report the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I have no objection to the point of order. The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I say at the proper time I propose to make the point of order that this is a private claim, and that the Committee on the District of Columbia had no jurisdiction to consider or report it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement in reference to this. This is money that has been appropriated by Congress for this specific purpose, but withheld by the Commissioners as a penalty.

Mr. MANN. The bill is purely a claim against the Government. As shown by the report, and practically by the bill, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia could not pay the money, not being authorized by law. The money was retained, as a penalty. Now this company presents a claim against the Government, which is like all other claims against the Government, a pure claim, not founded upon any law, not founded upon anything which can be considered by the Department. It is a pure claim against the Government, and ought to go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that this is entirely a District matter, on a District contract, and that the Commissioners have asked authority to make this payment, which they believe is in justice due to these parties.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the Chair to clause 3 of Rule XXI, page 281 of the Manual, which provides that no bill for the payment or adjudication of any private claim against the Government shall be referred, except by unanimous consent, to any other than the following-named committees, naming various committees not including the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Wisconsin another bill similar to this?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think not.

The gentleman spoke of two bills. The SPEAKER.

There is another bill (8, 3702) for the relief Mr. BABCOCK. of the Gurley Memorial Presbyterian Church, of the District of Columbia, but it is not in the same status as this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to clauses 1 and 2 of Rule XXII. The Chair would be glad if the gentleman from Wisconsin would ask unanimous consent that the committee may be discharged and that he may call this bill up to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal. The point of order would lie, if it would lie at all, in the event that the committee was discharged. It seems to be a question for which there is no precedent. It requires an examination of Rules XXI and XXII and some consideration, and the Chair would be glad to have until to-morrow morning to consider it.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to discharging the committee from further consideration of the bill and letting it go over until to-morrow morning?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that. The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MANN. Because, if it were in order, it could be called up now.

Mr. BABCOCK. But the Chair desires that the matter go over until to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not decide upon it, as it is now before the Chair.

Mr. MANN. If it is in order, he can move now to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I am perfectly willing that it should await the decision of the Chair until to-morrow morning, without taking any advantage

The SPEAKER. Then it will be in order to-morrow morning as of to-day.

GURLEY MEMORIAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the other bill referred to (S. 3702) for the relief of the Gurley Memorial Presbyterian Church, of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. I wish to say that this bill was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia under Rule XXI by the unanimous order of the House. It was referred to the Committee on Claims and reported back to the House with the request that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was done by unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that the committee be discharged from further consideration and that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is here objection to that request? Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the request, but I wish to make the same point of order.

The SPEAKER. Precisely. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Illinois desires to make a point of order. The Chair will hear from the gentleman

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, both of the bills involve the same construction of a rule, but under different circumstances, and I suggest that they both go over so that they can be both decided in the morning.

Mr. BABCOCK. This, Mr. Speaker, was sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia under Rule XXI by the unanimous consent of the House, and reported back to the House by the chairman of the Committee on Claims, complying exactly with the rules.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand, but the rule provides that an erroneous reference under this clause shall not confer jurisdiction on the committee. Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman read that part of the rule he read in the first place?

Mr. MANN. Rule XXI, clause 2, provides for a rereference, but the latter part of the rule provides that an erroneous reference under this clause shall not confer jurisdiction upon the committee. I suggest that, involving the construction of the same rule under different circumstances, they both might well be considered and decided at the same time to-morrow.

The Chair will call the attention of the The SPEAKER. gentleman from Illinois to what seems to the Chair to be a distinction between this bill and the one that goes over until This bill was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the distinction to which the Speaker desires to refer. In one case the bill is referred merely by a Member introducing it and by writing the name of the committee on it and putting it in the basket. In the other case it again comes before the House, having been referred by a Member, and by unanimous consent is referred to another committee.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But it involves a construction of the same rule: and while there is a distinction, I do not mean to say that the Chair may not properly hold that this bill is properly before the House. I suggest, however, that as long as one is to go over both may properly go over and be considered at the same

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman also to the fact that this is a Senate bill, and a Member has nothing to do with the reference of it. Under the rule the Speaker, acting for the House, referred it to the Committee on The Committee on Claims brought it back to the House, and the House, by unanimous consent, changed the reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia. So that it is the action of the House, and it has been ruled that such action confers jurisdiction without regard to the rules in many cases, many precedents.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the Chair has good reasons for the position which he may assume; but if that be the decision, then the latter part of that clause apparently means but very little, because in section 2, which is that clause, it refers not to a bill referred by the Member in the basket, but to a bill referred by the House, and the latter part of the clause says that an erroneous reference under this clause shall not confer jurisdiction upon the committee to consider or report the same.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman will notice that the rule he now refers to seems to cover House bills referred by Members. This is a Senate bill, referred originally by the Speaker to the Committee on Claims, and, under Rule XXIV, reported back from the Committee on Claims with recommendations that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the House unanimously referred it to that committee. There are many precedents where, without regard to the rule, the House by a majority has referred bills to committees, thereby conferring jurisdiction.

The Chair is inclined to the opinion that as to this bill the point is not well taken.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair is prepared to rule, of course I have no desire to have it go over, but—

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the point is not well taken as to this bill. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

well taken as to this bill. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

**Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the trustees or other authorized representatives of the various religious and educational institutions mentioned herein the sums set forth in their respective cases, said amounts having been heretofore erroneously paid by the said religious and educational institutions, and which character of assessments or account of special assessments or taxes levied against such religious and educational institutions, and which character of assessments or taxes the court of appeals of the District of Columbia heretofore held, in the case of the District of Columbia against Sisters of the Visitation, of Washington, reported in volume 15, Tucker's Reports, page 300 et seq., to be illegal and void and not a charge against such property.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time; was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 129 be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

The Clerk will report the title of the bill. The SPEAKER.

REPRINT OF REPORT ON RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman kindly yield to me while I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of a document?

Mr. OLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 500 additional copies be printed of the report of the river and harbor bill, Report No. 6752.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the reprint of 500 additional copies of the report on the river and harbor bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONNECTING PARKWAY BETWEEN SIXTEENTH STREET AND ROCK CREEK PARK.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 129) for the opening of a connecting parkway along ney Branch between Sixteenth street and Rock Creek Park, District Piney Branc of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill and that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER The gentleman from Illinois'objects.

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw the objection.

The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk The SPEAKER. will report the bill.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of sections 491a to 491n, both inclusive, of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within ninety days after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for connecting Sixteenth street with Rock Creek Park by a parkway of not more than 500 feet in width extending along or in the valley of Piney Branch, District of Columbia.

in width extending along or in the valley of Piney Branch, District of Columbia.

SEC 2. That the sum of $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, one half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to provide the necessary funds for the cost and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, to be reimbursed to the revenues of the District of Columbia and the United States in equal parts from assessments for benefits when the same are collected, and a sufficient sum to pay the amounts of all judgments and awards is hereby appropriated, one half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I send the following amendment to the Clerk's desk.

ing amendment to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment to the substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 18, strike out the word "five" where it appears in said line and insert in lieu thereof the following: "an average of four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The substitute as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF OBSTRUCTIONS FROM PAVED SIDEWALKS AND ALLEYS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 20067) for the removal of obstructions from sidewalks. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and I ask that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the bill and that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20067) to remove dirt, gravel, sand, and other obstructions from the paved sidewalks and alleys in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union may be discharged from the further consideration of this bill and it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, empowered and directed to levy a special tax, to become due and payable after the time of doing the work hereinafter mentioned when and as general taxes on real estate in said District are payable, and subject to all general tax laws on real estate in said District not inconsistent herewith, of $1 per linear foot on and against any improved or unimproved lot in said district not owned, rented, leased, or occupied by the United States and the District of Columbia, respectively, or foreign governments, embassies, legations, ambassadors, or ministers for each front from which lot dirt, gravel, sand, or other obstruction falls, caves, washes, and becomes deposited on the abutting or adjacent paved sidewalks or alleys within said District, and which remains thereon and is caused to be removed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia at any time after notice which the Commissioners of said District shall cause to be given in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the abatement of nuisances in the District of Columbia," and so forth, approved April 14, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to make, establish, alter, and amend, from time to time, as they may find necessary, all needful rules and regulations which are required in their judgment to properly administer and enforce the operation of this act: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to make the District of Columbia or the said Commissioners liable at the suit of private individuals or private or public corporations for any default, failure, or neglect in the administration of this act, and no action shall accrue therefor.

Sec. 2. That in order to enable the said Commissioners to comply with their duties under this act and to carry it into effect, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby auth

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have some explanation of this bill, as it seems to be an entirely new proposition.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that is strongly recommended and asked for by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in order to make some proper penalty to persons who own property, improved or otherwise, and who do not take proper care of the embankments adjoining sidewalks, and when rains come and dirt falls down on the sidewalks the Dis-trict is obliged, unless a bill of this character is passed, to remove the dirt from these banks at the expense of the District. This bill is to give the Commissioners authority to collect from the owners of property a penalty for not taking care of their own property with consideration of the rights of citizens of Washington.

Mr. MANN. How often may this assessment be levied?

Mr. OLCOTT. I presume the assessment will be levied immediately after the work is performed on any particular piece of property

Mr. MANN. It will likely be two or three times a year?

Mr. OLCOTT. Whatever charge there is against the property. If they are not taking care of their own property, there will be a lien upon that property and it will be filed in the usual way as penalties for the violation of any other municipal ordinance are levied and collected.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says "not taking care of their own property." This bill is not confined to a question of whether this man takes care of his own property or not. Any dirt that is deposited on the sidewalk by anybody, under this bill, it being the duty of the District to keep the sidewalk clean—somebody deposits dirt upon the sidewalk, or it washes from some lot onto the sidewalk—

Mr. OLCOTT. I have always believed it was the duty of those who owned property to care for the sidewalk connected now an ordinance against allowing snow and ice to remain on the sidewalk.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, I suppose, is aware that the court has held that that law is invalid?

Mr. OLCOTT. The law in regard to the removal of snow and ice?

Mr. MANN. Yes, sir. Mr. OLCOTT. I am not aware of it, and I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is in error.

Mr. MANN. I will inform the gentleman that it has been so held by the court in the District. It is invalid, and I judge this law will be invalid.

Mr. OLCOTT. The decision was in regard to a law that previously existed, and at the last session of Congress we passed a law providing for the objections that were raised by the court itself, and this follows the lines exactly of the law that was passed to meet the decision of the supreme court to the effect that the previous law was unconstitutional.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 45, noes 4.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER proceeded to count.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock] that there is evidently no quorum present, and it will be a good time to adjourn.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may lie over, retaining its present status, until the next District day

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] withdraw his point on the condition that the bill go over as unfinished business?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to withdrawing the point of no quorum if the bill is to be laid aside.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside.

The SPEAKER. The bill necessarily will come up as unfinished business on the next District day. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] withdraws his point of no quorum.

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill S. 7042.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock] calls up the bill S. 7042, of which the Clerk will read the

The Clerk read as follows:

To transfer jurisdiction of the Washington Aqueduct, the filtration ant, and appurtenances to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after July 1, 1907, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have all the powers and be subject to all the duties and limitations which under existing law are delegated to and imposed upon the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army in so far as the same relate to the jurisdiction and control over the Washington Aqueduct and its appurtenances in the District of Columbia, State of Virginia, and State of Maryland; and the said Commissioners are hereby given sole control over the Conduit road and the filtration plant, it being the intention of this act that the entire control over the Washington Aqueduct and all of its appurtenances, the filtration plant, Conduit road, all water mains, and the water-distribution system of the District of Columbia shall, on and after said date, be under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction and control of the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and that the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers of the United States Army shall be relieved of all duty and responsibility in connection with all of such work; and the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers shall, on request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, deliver to them all existing plans, surveys, and records, or duly certified copies thereof, deemed necessary or required by said Commissioners to enable them't to discharge the duties imposed on them by this act, the cost of making said copies to be paid by said Commissioners; and all property connected with said works shall be delivered to said Commissioners; and all appropriations available for the Washington Aqueduct, District of Columbia, and its appurtenances, including the filtration plant, shall be expended under the direction and control of the Commissioners of said District, and the employees paid from said appropriations shall be transferred to the jurisdiction of the said Commissioners for assignment to such duties as may

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it ought to be fully considered, as I understand it takes the water system out from under the control of the War Department and puts it in the hands of the District Commissioners

The SPEAKER. The bill can not be considered in the House without unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that it must be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I will take up no further business to-day, except to ask for the appointment of conferees on the bill (S. 6364) to incorporate the National Child Labor Committee.

NATIONAL CHILD LABOR COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 6364) to incorporate the National Child Labor Committee, with House amendment disagreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move to insist on the House amendment and agree to the conference. The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. Taylor of Ohio, Mr. Samuel W. Smith, and Mr. Sims as conferees.

VIEWS OF MINORITY ON SHIPPING BILL.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with an agreement had with the chairman of the committee, I ask unanimous consent to file the views of the minority on the substitute reported from that committee for the bill S. 529, called the "ship-subsidy bill."

The SPEAKER. Consent has already been granted, the Chair believes

Mr. SPIGHT. No, sir; I think not. I do not think it appears of record.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the minority was given until Tuesday to file their views.

The views of the minority were ordered printed.

PRINTING REPORT OF POSTAL COMMISSION.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 10,000 copies of the Report of the Postal Commission, appointed under the provisions of the act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department, approved June 26, 1906, being House Document No. ——, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that report from the Committee on Print-

Mr. GRIGGS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is this from the Committee on Printing? Mr. GRIGGS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to fill the blank?

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know the number of the document. I think it has not been given a number yet; but the document is sufficiently described, however.

Mr. PAYNE. It seems to me there ought to be an estimate of cost.

The SPEAKER. The document can be ascertained without number

Mr. GRIGGS. I think it is sufficiently described.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF POSTAL COMMISSION AND TESTIMONY.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 6,000 copies of the Report of the Postal Commission appointed under the provisions of the act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department, approved June 26, 1906, being House Document No. ——, Fifty-minth Congress, second session, to be accompanied by the testimony taken by the said Commission, together with the accompanying exhibits and digests, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

ALLIS-CHALMERS COMPANY, OF MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I understand the objection has been withdrawn to the consideration of the bill S. 7028.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I made the point of order on the Allis-Chalmers claim because on its face it seemed to me that it was subject to the point of order that it did not come from the proper committee. Upon a further investigation it seems to me to be a good claim for services rendered the District of Columbia; and therefore, so far as I am concerned, I withdraw the point of order.

The bill was read, as follows:

An act (8, 7028) for the relief of the Allis-Chalmers Company, of Milwaukee, Wis.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid from the appropriation for the water department, District of Columbia, extension of the high-service system, to the Allis-Chalmers Company, of Milwaukee, Wis., the sum of $8,870, deducted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as a penalty, under contract No. 3047, dated November 11, 1901.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF FEED SUPPLIES AT FORT ASSINNIBOINE, MONT.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution 231, authorizing the Secretary of War to sell certain hay, straw, and grain at Fort Assinnibolne, Mont.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby authorized to cause to be sold to the citizens of Montana, at its actual cost to the United States at place of sale, such limited quantities of hay, straw, and grain for domestic uses as, in his judgment, can safely be spared from the stock provided for the use of the garrison at Fort Assinnibolne, Mont.

The SEE AFER. Let those chiestics?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, is this a Senate or House resolution?

Mr. DIXON of Montana. It is a House resolution.
Mr. MANN. I would like to ask if there is any time limitation for that? Is this forever, or for the season?
Mr. DIXON of Montana. I will say in answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, that I have received a telegram showing the urgent necessity for this provision. I understand that there are from 15,000 to 20,000 head of cattle in that neighborhood that are on the very verge of starvation. We merely ask that permission to be given to the Secretary of War to sell them some hay and such garrison stores as are in excess of their wants.

Mr. MANN. I did not catch anything in the reading of this to indicate how long it would last.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I copied it from a resolution that was passed in the last Congress

Mr. MANN. It seems to provide forever.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. I will move to insert an amendment limiting the time.

Mr. MANN. Say within the next three months.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. The next three weeks will do.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "sold" the words "within the next three

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Three months will cover it. The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to insert this telegram in the RECORD.

There was no objection. The telegram is as follows:

FORT BENTON, MONT., January 28, 1907.

Hon. Jos. M. DIXON, House of Representatives, Washington:

Will you have War Department authorize commandant at Fort Assinniboine to furnish hay to ranchers in such quantities as can be spared on guaranty of Stockmen's National Bank that same will be returned in like quantity and quality as soon as weather will permit? This request is made by people here to prevent threatened loss of stock through hay shortage and continued storms and cold weather. Please answer my expense.

CHAS. N. PRAY.

LAND FOR UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25013) granting to the regents of the University of Oklahoma section No. 36, in township No. 9 north, of range No. 3 west of the Indian meridian, in Cleveland County, Okla.

The bill was read, as follows:

ridian, in Cleveland County, Okla.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of section No. 36, in township No. 9 north, of range No. 3 west, of the indian meridian, in Cleveland County, Okla. T., the same being a portion of the lands reserved to said Territory for common school purposes, be, and the same is hereby, granted to the regents of the University of Oklahoma, to be and become the property of the University of Oklahoma for the purpose of being used for and securing a proper campus and grounds for building purposes for the use of the said university, but no indemnity either in money or in land shall be allowed the State of Oklahoma for the purpose of acquiring grounds contiguous to the present grounds belonging to said university and to enlarge the campus and grounds for building and campus purposes in connection therewith.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MINNESOTA.

Mr. BUCKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 7827) permitting the building of a railway bridge across the Mississippi River in Morrison County, State of Minnesota.

The Chair lays before the House from the The SPEAKER. Speaker's table a Senate bill substantially the same as a House bill on the Calendar, which bill the Clerk will report.

The bill was read.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent (at the request of Mr. Buckman), the corresponding House bill on the Calendar was ordered to lie on the table.

FILES, ETC., OF THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 211, authorizing the transfer of the files, books, and pamphlets of the Industrial Commission.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all official minutes and files of correspondence of the Industrial Commission deposited with the Librarian of Congress by the joint resolution of February 21, 1902, be transferred to the Department of Commerce and Labor, to become the property of said Department. The Librarian of Congress is hereby authorized to select from the volumes and pamphlets constituting the library of the Industrial Commission such publications as may be needed for the uses of the Library of Congress, which books shall become the property of the Library of Congress, and to turn over the residue of such volumes and pamphlets to the Department of Commerce and Labor, to become the property of the said Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker-Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I understand this altogether. How many volumes will there be, and what is meant by their becoming the property of the Department of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that by act of Congress several years ago a body was created called the "Industrial Commission." During its investigations the Commission gathered up certain statistics, papers, books of reference, and so forth. Upon the expiration of the term of the Commission those books and papers were, by resolution of Congress, temporarily placed for safe-keeping in the building of the They are in the way there. The Library Library of Congress. of Congress has use for perhaps part of the books, but not for the records and other papers. On the other hand, I am advised that the Department of Commerce and Labor would like very much to have the originals of these documents.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What are they going to do with them when they get them?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. They want them for their files, I presume, for purposes of reference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How many sets of them are there? Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. They constitute all the papers, letters, books, and everything gathered up by the Industrial Commission.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Are they printed? Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Some of them are printed and some of them are letters and other papers.

WILLIAMS. Not something that can be distributed, then?

Mr. McCleary of Minnesota. No; there is just the one set. Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I wanted to know-just one

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. How much space do they occupy now? Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. So much space that the officials of the library object to their remaining there, because they need that space, and the officials of the Department of Com-merce and Labor desire them for their reference library.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is aware that the whole Department of Commerce and Labor and its entire building would not occupy as much space as one set of the book stacks in the Library, and they have a great many book stacks in the Library and not an inch of available space in the Department of Commerce and Labor to-day.
Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota.

The best place for this material is in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. MANN. The other day the Committee on Appropriations recommended that all of these books now in the Department of Commerce and Labor be transferred to the Library. To that of commerce and Labor be transferred to the Library. To that I objected on a point of order, and it went out of that bill.

And in their absence I shall object to this.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. This is not a matter that the Committee on Appropriations has properly to do with. It is a matter over which the Committee on the Library has jurisdic-

Mr. MANN. But the Committee on Appropriations brought in recommendation that all of these Department libraries be abolished. The gentleman did not make the point of order; I made the point of order and it went out on that point of order. The Committee on Appropriations was insistent that all Department libraries be abolished, and now the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCleary] proposes not only not to abolish the libraries, but to put a set of books more in that Department.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. This is material which the Department of Commerce and Labor desires for the use of its officials.

Mr. MANN. Why, in that case they can go and consult it here, and we may go and consult it if we desire if it is over here where it belongs-in the Congressional Library.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, does this require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I object, and we will bring the matter to a conclusion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

EXTENDING TIME TO CERTAIN HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate joint resolution 86, granting an extension of time to certain homestead entrymen with House amendments, with an amendment by the Senate to the House amendments.

The Clerk read the amendments.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the amendment of the Senate to the House amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is this the bill that was passed through the other day giving an extension of time to homesteaders?

Mr. LACEY. Yes. The only effect of this amendment by

Yes. The only effect of this amendment by the Senate was to change the words "joint resolution S1" to "public resolution No. 4," that resolution having since become a law. A reference now to this would be as appears in the laws rather than by the number that it appeared to have when passing through the House. That is the only effect of this amendment to the amendment.

The question is on the motion of the gen-The SPEAKER. tleman from Iowa that the House concur.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter; which was read and ordered to lie on the table:

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, what I am going to say I think the entire Senate is interested in. We have now remaining of the session two business days in January, twenty-three in February, and two in March, in all twenty-seven working days. There is not a single one of the appropriation bills that has become a law. Within these twenty-six or twenty-seven days Congress will have to appropriate something like $800,000,000 of the revenues of the Government in appropriation bills, and not one of those bills, as I said, has passed.

There has never been in my experience a condition where these necessary bills are so far behind as this year. There is no fault that can be laid to any committee, because as fast as the bills are received from the House they are taken up by the committees here and reported to this body. The Committee on Appropriations had two of these bills lately from the House, and within three or four days of the time of receiving them they met and considered them and reported them to the Senate. There are two of these bills now before the Senate.

I gave notice yesterday that this morning I would ask the Senate at the close of the morning business to take up the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill and get it out of the way. I have no more interest nor have the members of the Committee on Appropriations any more interest in having this necessary business done than every other Senator. But the Committee on Appropriations and the other committees having charge of the appropriation bills are met by propositions that consume all the time. We can not get these bills before the Senate. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveringe] has consumed, to the pleasure and profit of the Senate, the best of two days and wants another day. I find on looking at the Record that to-day has been substantially confiscated by a unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate that when the Senator from Indiana is through, not that an appropriation bill shall be taken up, but that the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] shall proceed to further instruct and please the Senate by another speech.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that by these unanimous-consent agreements the appropriation bills are left in the rear. I am powerless. I can not for one be here always because of the business of the Committee on Appropriations;

I am a large part of the day in the committee room; neither can the chairman nor any member of the committee always be here to prevent such unanimous-consent agreements. I do not like, and no Senator likes, to be disagreeable and interfere with Senators who desire to speak, but the business must be done. Yesterday morning the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], in charge of an important bill, ventured to suggest that possibly legislation is of more importance than speech making, but I doubt very much whether the Senate would agree to that proposition.

I am inclined and I am tempted to say that, not being able to be here and the members of the Committee on Appropriations not being able to be here at all times, I can not be bound hereafter, for one, by any unanimous-consent agreement that the time of the Senate shall be taken up when appropriation bills are ready.

I think it is proper to make this statement so that Senators will realize the danger we are in, with only some twenty-five working days and not a single appropriation bill passed. It is absolutely necessary that they should be passed, and some of them involve matters that will give rise to quite extensive debate. We ought to take them up.

There is one remedy, and we shall soon have to resort to it. I hope Senators will bear that in mind. I thought of moving that the Senate would to-day take a recess from 6 o'clock to 8, in order to attend to business, or if the making of speeches is of more importance than that, to listen to speeches and get rid of some of the things that are blocking the way. But I do not think it would be hardly fair, in view of the convenience of Senators, to do that for to-night, but I think to-morrow, unless the appropriation bills are considered and proceeded with, I or the chairman or any other member of the committee will move for a night session. We shall soon be confronted with a condition where it will be necessary to have frequent night sessions, night after night, for Senators must remember that not one of these great bills has yet been before the Senate, except the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

I have thought it proper to lay this statement before the Senate and to appeal to the Senate to stand by the Committee on Appropriations and the other great committees that have charge of appropriation bills in getting them out of the way. If not, we will run into what we did not last year, because there we were at liberty to extend the session. We will run into the 4th of March and be in danger of being called together in extra session.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I wish to say only one word after what the Senator from Maine has said. In common with the whole Senate I very heartly agree with him, and I want to thank the Senator personally for his courtesy and kindness in not invoking the rule which gives the appropriation bills the right of way to-day, if he wishes to do so.

I wish to say in reference to my own speech that, first of all, it has not been a speech. It has been a presentation of certain evidence and a reference to certain laws on a matter of very great public consequence that is before the Senate and the country.

Furthermore, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that, so far as I am concerned, up to last Wednesday I had not occupied one moment of the time of the Senate at the present session. I think fully half of the time of the Senate has been taken up with a discussion of the Brownsville affair. Even in this case I had given notice of making my remarks to the Senate two weeks ago, and I did not do it at the request of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dolliver], who is the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge, and who was necessarily absent. After that there was the death of a member of this body and other things that interfered, which ran this matter over. The Senator will remember that the day when I expected to take the floor the appropriation bill was considered—

Mr. HALE. I am interested in what the Senator is saying. The Senator from Indiana will bear in mind that I do not propose to interfere with him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do. I say I heartily agree with every word the Senator has said. I only want to call attention to the fact that the rather extended remarks which I am submitting are due to the importance of laying the full facts before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I hope I shall be able later in the day to get up one of the appropriation bills. I shall try to do so.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am very much obliged to the Senator for his kindness.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. HOPKINS. 1 am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7760) to authorize the Albany Railroad Bridge Company or the Chicago and North-westera Railway Company to reconstruct a bridge across the Mississippi River, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 2, to strike out all of section 2 in the following words:

page 2, to strike out all of section 2 in the following words:

Sec. 2. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects of this act said Albany Railroad Bridge Company or said Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company, and their successors and assigns, may receive, purchase, and also acquire by lawful appropriation and condemnation in the States of Illinois and Iowa, upon making proper compensation, to be ascertained according to the laws of the State within which the same is located, real and personal property and rights of property, and may make any and every use of the same necessary and proper for the enlargement of said existing bridge or for the construction, maintenance, and operation of the new bridge and approaches, consistently with the laws of the United States and of said States, respectively. respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3 (2) on page 2, line 20, after the word "That," to strike out the words "the privileges conferred hereunder shall cease" and insert "this act shall be null and void;" so as to read:

That this act shall be null and void unless the work of enlarging or replacing said bridge is begun within two years and is completed within five years from the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The sections will be renumbered to correspond with the section stricken out.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

IMMIGRATION STATION AT NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am directed by the Committee on Immigration, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7247) to provide for the establishment of an immigrant station at New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, and the erection in said city, on a site to be selected for said station, of a public building, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. McENERY. I ask for the present consideration of the bill just reported from the Committee on Immigration.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consider-

The first amendment of the Committee on Immigration was, in section 1, line 9, to strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Government of the United States;" so as to make the section read:

That the Sccretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish an immigration station at the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana; and to cause to be erected on a site to be selected a public building to temporarily accommodate and care for immigrants arriving at said city: Provided, That the land and dock room necessary for said station and building be transferred to the Government of the United States free of any cost to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 1, line 12, to strike out the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof the words which sum shall be paid from the permanent appropriation for expenses of regulating immigration."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF STOCK NEAR FORT ASSINNIBOINE.

Mr. CARTER. The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 231) authorizing the Secretary of War to sell certain hay, straw, and grain at Fort Assinniboine, which has just come to the Senate from the House presents an emergency case, and I desire briefly to state the facts.

The joint resolution proposes to grant to the Secretary of War the right to sell certain hay and fodder at Fort Assinniboine reservation to the owners of stock. By the recent storm a very large number of cattle have been driven against the fences on this reservation. A Member of the House states that fifteen to twenty thousand head of cattle are now on the edge of the reservation in a state of starvation. The Government has a surplus of hay at that point, and the joint resolution proposes to authorize the Secretary of War to sell that surplus to the stockmen for the preservation of the stock.

I have consulted a majority, I believe, of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs, and with their assent I ask that the joint resolution may be laid before the Senate and that it may now be put upon its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be sold within the next three months to the citizens of Montana, at its actual cost to the United States at place of sale, such limited quantities of hay, straw, and grain for domestic uses as, in his judgment, can safely be spared from the stock provided for the use of the garrison at Fort Assimilatione, Mont.

By unanimous consent the Sanata as in Committee of the

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia.

The Chair lays before the Senate The VICE-PRESIDENT.

the bill indicated by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, valuable as time is, and anxious as I am to continue and conclude, I purpose to take five minutes for the reading of some additional definite affidavits respecting certain States, from which affidavits have not been presented. In doing this, I wish to state to the Senate that they are only samples of a large number of others, all to like effect. Since I can read them very much more quickly than the Secretary can read them, I shall read them myself.

I call the particular attention of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Carmack] as well as that of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] to the first affidavit which I shall read although it has already been introduced. It will stand another reading, and many readings. It is as follows: UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Columbia, 88.

United States of America, District of Columbia, 88:

Personally appeared before me this day A. J. McKelway, who on oath says that in December, 1905, he was on board a train going from Knoxville, Tenn., to Spartanburg, S. C.; that he saw on board the train an immigration agent of an immigration association of South Carolina, who was in charge of a company of about fifty people bound for the cotton mills of South Carolina, whom the agent had induced to leave their homes in western Tennessee; that the agent told him that he had made seven "shipments" of these people for the cotton mills from Newport, Tenn., averaging fifteen to the "shipment;" that seven more "shipments" had gone from Cleveland, Tenn., that there were several agents at work besides himself, and that he had shipped personally about 500 people to the cotton mills; that he, A. J. McKelway, talked with some of the children in the company; that Harrison Swan said that he was "going on" 10 years of age and was going to work in the Four Mills, at Greenville, S. C.; that Charley Matthews and a little fellow with him of the same size said that they were about 9 years of age and were going to work in the mills; that the agent told him that there were a plenty of children 6 and 8 and 10 years of age in the South Carolina mills, because their parents lied about their ages; that in the summer of 1905 the Rev. Mr. Abernethy, a Methodist minister living at Clyde, in western North Carolina, told him, A. J. McKelway, that 1,500 people had taken the train at Clyde for the South Carolina cotton mills during the preceding year.

I also call the attention of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] to the following affidavit:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Columbia, ss:

Personally appeared before me A. J. McKelway, who, on oath, says that on May 21, 1905, accompanied by a friend of his, he visited the Exposition Mills of Atlanta. The day being Sunday, the children were not at work in the mill; that the names and ages of the following children were secured from their testimony as to their own ages and the ages of their companions who were at work in the mill: That John Chitwood says he was 10 years old on March 1, and had been working in the mill about two years; Ernest Eton, 13 on May 6, and had been working for two years; Lily Chitwood, 9 years old, and had been working in the mill two years; L. S. Sharpton, 13 years old, and had been working in the mill two years; L. S. Sharpton, 13 years old, and had been working in the mill one and one-half years; Clyde Kennington, 10 years old, and had just begun to work in the mill; Noah McWilliams, 14 years old, and worked in the mill; Will Moony, 12 years old, and had been at work in the mill three years; Liz Kelly, 9, and worked in the mill; that Grover Warren was a little girl 7 years old, who had been working in the mill shout two years; that Horeb Dodson, 8 years old, had been working in the mill about three months; that Earl Sword, about 8 years of age, had been working in the mill about two years; that Ned Chandler, 9 years of age, had been working in the mill about two years; that Ned Chandler, 9 years of age, had been working in the mill about two years; that Ned Chandler, 9 years of age, had been working in the mill about two years; that Ned Chandler, 9 years of age, had been working in the mill six months; that Fred Jeter, 9 years old, had been working in the mill six months; that Fred Jeter, 9 years old, had been working in the mill six months; that Suse Simms, about 10 years of age, had been working in the mill six months; that Suse Simms, about 10 years old, had been working in the mill for four months; that Son Baldwin, about 9, had b

Those were the mills that were employing children 6 and 7 years old. This is the "isolated" abuse by the "best people," with whom the Senator from Georgia is on such loving terms. I further call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the two following affidavits, merely because the statement was made yesterday that the great mass of testimony presented was only as to "sporadic" and "occasional" instances:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Columbia, 88:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public A. J. McKelway, who, on oath, says that the Gate City Cotton Mills and the Exposition Cotton Mills, mentioned in other affidavits, signed by A. J. McKelway, are members of the Georgia Industrial Association, and were under the obligations of an agreement—

This is the "gentlemen's agreement," to which I referred yesterday not to employ children under 12 years of age unless they were orphans or the children of dependent parents or could read and write or had attended school the preceding year, and not to employ children under 12 years of age under any circumstances; that Mr. Samuel A. Carter, president of the Gate City Cotton Mills was made chairman of an investigating committee to discover whether there were any children in the Georgia cotton mills employed in violation of the said agreement, which had been made by the manufacturers in lieu of legislation; that Mr. Charles Tuller, one of the officials of the Exposition Cotton Mills, challenged in the public prints the citation of any instance of the violation of these rules; and that in spite of this agreement of the manufacturers not to employ children as specified, it was a matter of common knowledge that the agreement was violated in a large number of the cotton mills.

A. J. McKelway.

[SEAL.] Notary Public, Washington, D. C.

Here are two others [exhibiting]; but I wish to hasten, and shall not now stop to read them. They are only samples, Mr. President and Senators, of a large number of others which prove that this is the universal and not the "isolated" case.

Now I call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the following affidavit:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Columbia:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public, F. C. Roberts, who no ath says that in February, 1906, he was in Winchester, Vn., in the interests of organized labor, and that he went at the noon hour to a large woolen mill and a knitting mill in Winchester, and that he saw the operatives coming out of the mills for their midday meal: that there were a large number of children employed under 14 and quite a number under 12, to all appearances; that at the same hour a large number of negro children—

I wish to call the attention of Senators on the other side of the Chamber to this statement. It is the affidavit to which I called attention yesterday, which shows that whereas the children of the white working class of the South are going into the mills, the children of the negroes are going into the schools. So he goes on to state that at the same hour when he saw these white children coming out of the mill, he saw a large number of negro children coming out of a large negro school.

at the same hour a large number of negro children came out of a large negro school near by for recess; and that the contrast was noticeable in the particular that the negro children were playing and snowballing each other on their way home, while the white children employed in the mills were hurrying cith anxious faces to their lunch, so as to return to the mill in time; and that he found the same conditions to exist in a number of towns in the South where textile establishments were located

There is one way to solve the race question-keep the white children in the schools as well as the negroes. I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman], who has so valiantly defended the law of that State and attacked any method of stopping the evil all over the country, to the following affidavit, and will supply any number of additional over that may be demanded: ones that may be demanded:

NORTH CAROLINA.

Personally appeared before me, a notary public, F. C. Roberts, who on oath says that in March, 1906, being in Salisbury, N. C., representing the American Federation of Labor, he visited a cotton mill on the outside of the town, called, to the best of his knowledge and belief, the "Salisbury cotton mills:" that he went through these mills and noted carefully the size and ages of the employees; that there were very few adults employed in the mills; that in the spinning department 90 percent of the employees were children from 7 to 12 years of age, to all appearances; that these children were compelled to work at and about machinery dangerous to life and limb; that many of them had lost a finger or two from the machinery that they were compelled to handle, and that several of them had bandaged fingers; that one of the children, when asked how long they worked, said that they were compelled to work eleven hours a day; that in appearance they were pallid faced, hollow chested, and with emaclated limbs; that one of the children, when asked if they ever attended school, said that the only chance they had was at night.

Notary Public, District of Columbia.

Mr. OVERMAN. Who is it that makes that affidavit? Mr. BEVERIDGE. The affidavit states that it was "subscribed and sworn to before me this 26th day of January, 1906," and it is signed by F. C. Roberts.

Mr. OVERMAN. Can the Senator tell me who F. C. Roberts

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes. I think F. C. Roberts is the man who made the same affidavit concerning the cotton mill over in Virginia that I have referred to.

Mr. OVERMAN. But who is F. C. Roberts, I should like to

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will find out.

Mr. OVERMAN. You introduce him here as a witness. Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do. And further the Senator has asked me a question, and he must keep still until I answer it.

F. C. Roberts, as I understand, is a representative of the American Federation of Labor. I think in fact he says he represents the American Federation of Labor and that he went upon that business for the investigation of this cotton mill. I will say to the Senator further that I think the Senator is pretty well acquainted with Dr. A. J. McKelway.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am. Mr. BEVERIDGE. He is a citizen of your own State.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does he make that affidavit?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; he does not; but he makes some other affidavits, and if I had more time this morning I would present a large number of them. I shall, anyhow, under the head of law violations, to which I referred yesterday.

Mr. OVERMAN. Did Doctor McKelway make any affidavit in reference to that mill?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Here is one, and I think-

Mr. OVERMAN rose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will pardon me a minute, I think I have some in my committee room.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to state that I know something

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Go ahead.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is located in my own town, and I do not believe at the present time-I do not know the date of that affidavit as to when that happened-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In March, 1906. Mr. OVERMAN. I do not believe there is a word of truth in I have been at that mill, but I do not have any interest in I have never seen or heard of any such conditions. I think it is one of the best conducted mills in the country, I know they have one of the most beautiful school buildings and a fine school there carried on by the factory. The superintendent is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and one of the best men I think I have ever known in my life, who has been very careful with the children. It is his rule to see that all those children who work in the mill are educated. If all of the affidavits offered by the Senator are as exaggerated as this I shall have good reason to doubt them all. I hope this is not the character

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can not permit the Senator, in view of the time at my disposal, to take any more of my time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think

The VICE-PRESIDENT, The Senator from Indiana declines to yield further.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator wants to make a speech, I do decline; but if he wants to ask a question I will answer it. Mr. OVERMAN. I am not going to make a speech. I am just stating what I know about that particular mill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator may do so in his own time. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana objects to further interruption.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will answer any question, but I can not yield, in view of the length of time at my disposal, for a speech to be inserted in the midst of my remarks.

I wish to state further in this connection, since this has been questioned, that he says "to the best of his knowledge and belief" it is the Salisbury Cotton Mills, and I have no doubt it is the Salisbury Cotton Mills. But Mr. Roberts says he does not know; he believes so. But no matter what the name of the mill is. Mr. Roberts saw these children and swears to it; there's no mistake about the children, and that is the important thing.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not hear the Senator. Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am talking as loud as I can. The Senator must pay more attention, because I must get on.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am trying to pay attention.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say further, as I have said two or three times before, that any amount of sworn testimony that Senators call for will be furnished as this debate proceeds. Notwithstanding the enormous amount which I have, I can say to the Senator that what I have presented is only the beginning.

That was an affidavit as to North Carolina. Now I present one on Alabama conditions:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Columbia, ss:

Personally appeared before me A. J. McKelway, who on oath says that in the fall of 1905 he visited a mill in Alabama whose name he prefers not to give; that he saw at least thirty children in the spinning room of that mill who seemed to be under 12 years of age; that one little girl testified to being 9 years of age, and that she was considerably larger than many children who were seen at work in that mill.

A. J. McKelway.

And another, on South Carolina conditions:

SOUTH CAROLINA.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Columbia, 88:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public. A. J. McKelway, who on oath says that during the month of April, 1905, he, in company with Mr. Edward T. Devine, Mr. V. E. Macy, of New York, and others, visited the Olympia cotton mills at Columbia, S. C. under a former management; that he saw a large number of children at work, in the spinning room especially, and some in the weaving department; that there were at least lifty children in the spinning room who appeared to be under 12 years of age; that one little girl told him that she was 8 years of age, and judging from the comparative sizes there were several children not over 6 years of age.

McKelway, who on oath says that in March, 1905, he visited some of the cigar factories of Tampa, Fla.; that the number of young children employed in these factories was small as compared to the number in cotton mills, but that at least twenty children were seen who seemed to be 12 years old and under and double that number who seemed to be under 14.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a large number of similar affidavits, and I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I had handed me—and I have now in my office and will insert in the Record—a statement of the mill owners of North Carolina before the committee of the legislature of that State in resisting what is known as the McKelway bill at the last legislature, in which resistance they were successful.

[These affidavits here referred to are inserted under the head "Nonenforcement of State laws" in an earlier portion of Senator Beveringe's remarks.]

Mr. OVERMAN rose. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me a moment. I shall, if this debate goes on, put in the RECORD a statement by the authorities themselves-the labor commission-showing that mill owner after mill owner said he thought children under 12 years of age ought to be employed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do, for a question.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not denying any of the facts contained in the affidavits, because I know nothing about them, except one affidavit as to a mill in the town in which I live, the facts regarding which are within my own knowledge.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has said that twice.

Mr. OVERMAN. Therefore I do not want the Senator to refer me to other testimony that may be introduced, but if all the affidavits are like the affidavits produced there I have some doubt about them, although I admit the evil.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has impressed that upon the minds of the Senate by repeated statements; so it is between the Senator, now, and the people who make the affidavits.

THE NATIONAL CHILD-LABOR COMMITTEE.

I wish to say right here something that the Senator can bear Three of these affidavits and many others are made by Dr. A. J. McKelway. I think his residence is in North Carolina. He is a southern man and is the publisher of a paper called "The Presbyterian." He is a young man. He is the agent or in the employ of the National Child Labor Committee. It is because of this and because of his enthusiasm in this work—and as to his character and standing and purity and truthfulness and great ability every Senator from the South can testify—that he has made these investigations and these affida-

Mr. President, it is appropriate here to say that the National Child Labor Committee has done more than all other forces in this country to stop this evil. For years it has been at work. Its members are not sentimentalists, they are practical men of affairs. They include such business men as Isaac Seligman, the eminent New York financier; Mr. Warburg, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; men like Mr. Macy, of New York. They include such scholars and publicists as Doctor Lindsey, Dr. Felix Adler, and Mr. Devine, whose names are known to the entire country and to the entire educational world.

THE KIND OF MEN WHO SUPPORT THIS BILL.

Some of those men, Mr. President, as I said the other day, are the most ardent and certainly and without doubt the most learned "State rights" men in this Republic. Dr. Felix Alder is an example, and yet years of study and years of investigation have convinced them that it is impossible for the States, acting separately, to stop these evils.

The new law of Georgia would never have been passed, the one in North Carolina would never have been passed, but for the activity of this great, splendid, militant organization of righteousness called the National Child-Labor Committee. The executive committee of this great organization, Mr. President, after a very careful discussion, lasting hours at each meeting for two meetings, passed a resolution indorsing this particular

The national child-labor convention of Cincinnati, where 4,000 people from all over this country, including among them some of the best lawyers in the land, as well as some of the best business men in the land, adopted the same resolution.

Before this debate is through I shall show the Senate where the same thing has been done by other great organizations. such, for instance, as the most powerful educational organiza-tion in this country, the State Teachers' Association of Ne-braska, which passed a resolution definitely indorsing this particular bill and earnestly requesting their Senators and Representatives in Congress to support it.

Upon that subject I might stop before I resume the legal portion of this argument and say to Senators on the other side that the man who will be your next standard bearer in the next Presidential contest—William Jennings Bryan—has also, and with all his heart, indersed this particular bill. To those on this side of the Chamber I say that the great man who is now President of the United States is for this particular bill with all his heart. So it is not merely the work of "sentimentalists" his heart. So it is not merely the work of "sentimentalists" or of men who have given their lives to learning that I look for comfort and support. I am proud of all this support, and yet I am far more strengthened by the volume of testimony that pours in upon me from the people.

But, of course, the "people" don't amount to anything, "What do the people know about the Constitution?" say the opponents of this bill. When I cited Dr. Felix Adler to a learned Senator the other day as a supporter of this bill—and Doctor Adler is a man celabrated all over the entire world of Doctor Adler is a man celebrated all over the entire world of learning for his accomplishments-I was met with this convincing reply: "Doctor Adler! What does he know about the Constitution? He is not a lawyer."

Nobody knows about the Constitution but certain "lawyers." it seems, although the Constitution was made for the people, was "adopted by the people at the polls," as Marshall declares, and is supposed to be anything but mysterious. Yet even a celebrated scholar like Doctor Adler can't possibly understand the Constitution, because he, with all his learning, is "no lawyer," according to some who will try to kill this bill here in

Mr. CARMACK. May I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator from Indiana says that the gentleman who will be the next standard bearer of the Democratic party indorses this bill. I want to know what the gentleman who will be the next standard bearer of the Republican party thinks about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. My dear [laughter]—Mr. President, the relations between myself and the Senator from Tennessee are so tender that we usually call each other "old man," "my dear boy" and other terms of affection that which I was about to

The Senator from Tennessee, Mr. President, wants to know a great many things, and I am not going to tell him. curious-minded man. I do not blame him for that, and that is undoubtedly the origin of some of the Senator's attractiveness and brilliancy, and no Senator in this body has more of either.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE LAW.

Mr President, I think it perhaps will be more convenient to me to make a résumé of the legal part of the discussion which I made yesterday. It will occupy perhaps a minute or two.
Yesterday I referred to what all lawyers know as to what was the occasion for the adoption of the Constitution. If it had not been necessary to put in the commerce clause, I doubt very much whether the Constitutional Convention would ever have been called. At that time the words "regulate commerce" were in twenty-seven acts then existing of the British Parliament, with which the framers of the Constitution were familiar. In every one of those acts the words "regulate commerce" included the meaning of "prohibition," and as soon as the Constitution was adopted this understanding was acted upon by the Congress in passing the embargo laws, which absolutely prohibited certain commerce with foreign nations.

As soon as this question came up, as it did indirectly in Gibbons v. Ogden, that great jurist and statesman, John Marshall, held that that was absolutely within the power of Congress; and rery early, in the case of United States v. Coombs, the Supreme Court, in passing upon the scope of this clause—it was then a subject under great discussion—said that it might include anything not definitely connected with commerce if it could be invoked for that purpose, as, for example, the power of Congress to pass a law making it a criminal offense to take a trunk that had been washed up from a ship, if it were above high water. In that opinion, Senators will remember, the court said that it involved unquestionably the power to prohibit the transportation of articles; although perhaps that is obiter dictum.

In the case of United States v. Marigold the question was definitely met and decided, so far as importations were concerned, and in the case of United States v. Forty-Three Gallons of Whisky the court definitely held that the power of Congress over commerce among the Indian tribes-which is precisely the same as the power of Congress over the States-included the power to prohibit the introduction of whisky, not only into the Territory where Indian tribes were located, but into a State that was near that Territory, where one drink of it might be sold to one Indian. No person has gone any further-no case could go

THE BRIGANTINE WILLIAM CASE,

Mr. President, I have here Thayer's Cases on Constitutional Law. In 1808 a case was decided which is so important and so historic a case that it is included in his two great volumes. It is United States v. Brigantine William. That is the only case, I believe, in either the district or circuit courts of the United States or the Supreme Court where the constitutionality of the embargo laws was ever questioned. The court sustained their constitutionality, and I will call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the fact that it was sustained, not under the taxing power, not under the war power, but exclusively under the commerce clause. The court says:

"Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes."

Such is the declaration in the Constitution. Stress has been laid in the argument on the word "regulate," as implying in itself a limitation. Power to regulate, it is said, can not be understood to give a power to annihilate. To this it may be repiled that the acts under consideration, though of very ample extent, do not operate as a prohibition of all foreign commerce.

It will be admitted that partial prohibitions are authorized by the expression; and how shall the degree or extent of the prohibition be adjusted but by the discretion of the National Government, to whom the subject appears to be committed?

I want to stop right here and ask this: Whence came such

I want to stop right here and ask this: Whence came such power as we have over interstate commerce and foreign commerce? From the delegation of that power by the States to the Nation, did it not? Did it come from any other source?

Very well, now. What power did the States have when they made this delegation to the Federal Government? As I shall show by direct quotations in a moment, that they had absolutely sovereign power, does anybody question that the States, under the Articles of Confederation, could prohibit commerce and do anything that they pleased, and that they were not sovereign and supreme?

Well, then, what became of that power? They delegated it to the Federal Government. That is the source. Does the Senator from Rhode Island question that? If he does, the Senator from Rhode Island is in a quarrel with the Supreme Court upon that question. How much did they keep for them-

Mr. ALDRICH. They delegated the "power to regulate."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. And nothing else. Mr. BEVERIDGE. It has been definitely decided what "regulate" means. Here is now one of the cases that decides it. quote from the same case:

Besides, if we insist on the exact and critical meaning of the word "regulate," we must, to be consistent, be equally critical with the substantial term "commerce." The term does not necessarily include shipping or navigation.

This great jurist, who sat upon the Massachusetts Federal bench, anticipated all that is going through the mind of the Senator from Rhode Island. If you limit the word "regulate" by the same rules, you have got to limit the word "commerce," which it qualifies. Where would that lead the Senator? It would exclude navigation. That court goes on to point out:

would exclude navigation. That court goes on to point out:

Much less does it include the fisheries. Yet it never has been contended that they are not the proper objects of national regulation, and several acts of Congress have been made respecting them.

It may be replied that these are incidents to commerce and intimately connected with it, and that Congress, in legislating respecting them, act under the authority given them by the Constitution to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the enumerated powers.

Let this be admitted, and are they not at liberty also to consider the present prohibitory system as necessary and proper to an eventual beneficial regulation? I say nothing of the policy of the expedient. It is not within my province. But on the abstract question of constitutional power I see nothing to prohibit or restrain the measure.

So we see the Senator's view of what the word "regulate" means was anticipated and settled just exactly ninety-nine means was anticipated and settled just exactly ninety-nine years ago this year. Then the court proceeds a little further:

It was perceived that under the power of regulating commerce Congress would be authorized to abridge it in favor—of the great principles of humanity and justice.

How "abridge?" What for, "abridge?"

Hence the introduction of a clause in the Constitution so framed as to interdict a prohibition of the slave trade until 1808. Massachusetts and New York proposed a stipulation that should prevent the erection of commercial companies with exclusive advantages.

It has been said in the argument that the large commercial States, such as New York and Massachusetts, would never have consented to the grant of power relative to commerce, if supposed capable of the extent now claimed. On this point, it is believed, there was no misunderstanding. The necessity of a competent National Government was manifest. Its essential characteristics were considered and well understood; and all intelligent men perceived that a power to advance and protect the national interests accessarily involved a power that might be abused.

The question of the abuse of the power, which is the only argument made against this bill that I have heard, and I have heard about all of them, I shall discuss pretty fully in a moment. It is not necessary for me to read the opinion in the Forty-three Gallons of Whisky case or the Rahrer case, because I read those yesterday.

THE ADDYSTON PIPE CO. CASE.

The next case to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate is The Addyston Pipe Company v. United States (175 U. S.), and I read briefly from page 228. I am showing now the tremendous scope of this power of Congress over commerce has been held by the Supreme Court to mean the prohibition of anything. In this case it was held that the Sherman antitrust law. which prohibited the making of a contract, was entirely constitutional, although that part of it, as all lawyers will remember, was the point on the case which was bitterly fought. The court

The reasons which may have caused the framers of the Constitution to repose the power to regulate interstate commerce in Congress do not, however, affect or limit the extent of the power itself.

This was said because the question had been asked of the court, the main question had been asked of the court that is so often asked here in debates upon legal questions that are very close. "What was the intention of the framers?" "Did the close, "What was the intention of the framers?" "Did framers intend this?" "Did the framers intend that?" a matter of course, the framers never foresaw steam or electricity. The framers never anticipated the telegraph. The framers did not anticipate the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Supreme Court says that what may have been the purpose has nothing to do with the limit of the power.

The court goes on:

In Gibbons v. Ogden (supra) the power was declared to be complete in itself, and to acknowledge no limitations other than are prescribed by the Constitution.

Under this grant of power to Congress that body, in our judgment, may enact such legislation as shall declare void and prohibit the performance of any contract-between individuals or corporations where the natural and direct effect of such a contract will be, when carried out, to directly, and not as a mere incident to other and innocent purposes, regulate to any substantial extent interstate commerce. (And when we speak of interstate—

I call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the fact that I am coming back to this-we also include in our meaning foreign commerce.)

Mr. KEAN. What is the volume?
Mr. BEVERIDGE. One hundred and seventy-five United States—the Addyston Pipe Company case. The Senator is familiar with it.

Mr. KEAN. Yes

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now I come to the most important case upon this subject that the Supreme Court has ever decided, though no wider perhaps than the Forty-three Gallons of Whisky case, no wider perhaps than the Rahrer case, and of course everybody knows that it is the Lottery case.

THE LOTTERY CASE.
